Would Leave Only 47,000 U. S. Clerks Outside System; Gets Right of Way

Economics and Politics

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT will appear in person at the opening day of the Congressional session next Wednesday to deliver his message on the "State of the Nation." His budget message, to be delivered the next day, was expected to show a probable deficit of $2,500,000,000 or less. Page 2.

Legislation empowering the President to cover 250,000 more Federal employes into the civil service system last night was definitely placed on the agenda of Congress, following conferences at the White House and with Congressional leaders.

Chairman Ramspeck of the House Civil Service Committee called on President Roosevelt to ask him to recommend the long-pending reform in his message to Congress next week. He did not disclose the President's intention.

Mr. Roosevelt, who urged full civil service coverage in his original reorganization plan, already has exercised his existing authority by executive orders blanketing under civil service rules workers in virtually all agencies and non-policy-forming jobs not specifically barred by statute. But 297,000 Federal jobs still remain outside the merit system.

Bill Given Right of Way

The Ramspeck bill, which has been granted right of way by the House Rules Committee, would empower the President to apply civil service rules to all but 47,444 of the remainder. Majority Leader Rayburn has promised floor time for the measure, Ramspeck said.

Passage of the Hatch act last year paved the way for the measure, according to the Georgian. He pointed out that civil service bans on political activity, one reason for House opposition to the merit system in the past, now affect all Federal workers under the Hatch act.

Only the WPA administrative staff would be barred from civil service coverage under the bill which removes all other statutory exclusions from the system. Largest Federal agency totally outside the civil service that could be brought in under the measure is TVA. Others that would be covered include the HOLC, the FHA, the RFC and many agencies under the Agriculture Department now operating from emergency funds, such as the Farm Security Administration.

Discretion on Transfers

Discretion on transfers would be left entirely up to the President who could, as he did in past orders, exclude Government lawyers and technical experts. Hundreds of employes in old line departments, such as deputy United States Marshals and deputy internal revenue collectors, not now under civil service, would be eligible.

Moving along parallel lines with Senator Hatch, (Democrat), of New Mexico, who has framed a bill extending bans on political activity to employes of State agencies financed from Federal funds, Ramspeck said he will seek action on another bill aimed at extending the merit system to State personnel.

Scholars in Conventions Here Weigh Visions Of a Brave, New World Against Realities

Is a world union practical? Should America help European democracies fight the war? What is the trend in church-state relationship? The minds of hundreds of American scholars dwelled on these and other questions yesterday as three conventions here continued in session. Approximately 3,500 scholars took part in the round tables, forums and lectures in meetings of the American Political Science Association, the American Historical Association and the American Catholic Philosophy Society. Some opinions expressed at these meetings are reflected below.

History

American entrance into the European war probably would assure a "knockout victory" for the Allies, but "we would run the risk of a new Versailles peace, a new legend of oppression in Germany and new Hitlers," President James Phinney Baxter of Williams College told the American Historical Association last night.

DR. HU SHIH

At the outbreak of the present conflict, he said in a banquet at the Mayower Hotel, American public opinion was "more completely mobilized in favor of one set of belligerents than it was in 1916."

Dr. Baxter said "there is a tendency in the public mind today to shape neutrality policy upon the basis of our likes or upon our moral disapprobation and an apparent wish to engage in a just war."

This attempt "to take emotion into a realm of policy intended to assure abstention and impartiality in all wars is out of line with the traditional neutrality policy of the

Political Science

The idea of a federal union of the world patterned after the United States of America was assailed as visionary yesterday by a panel of notables at the American Political Science Association meeting in the Wardman Park Hotel.

STREIT

Clarence K. Streit, author of "Union Now," which has led to an international movement to promote the idea, was praised for stimulating discussion and arousing interest in world unity, but his plan was held unworkable in this generation.

The general session was the highlight of a day of round-table sessions in which 1,500 political scientists tackled numerous problems of political administration.

Streait, for several years Geneva correspondent of the New York Times, explained that his idea evolved from intimate observation of the League of Nations.

A slender, soft-spoken man in his forties, Streit found himself the target of friendly critics, of whom some defended the League of Na-

Philosophy

A plea for the integration of church and state and the independence of church from state was made yesterday by the Rev. Charles A. Hart, of Catholic University, in a paper read before the American Catholic Philosophic Society.

REV. HART

Without some kind of integration the modern lay state tends to become absolute without any religion, Father Hart declared. Germany, Russia, Turkey and Japan have carried to the extreme a tendency which is present to a degree even in America, he said later.

"The American Government recognizes no religious influences on the citizen as such," he explained, "and this indifference circumscribes the church.

"I don't think the state can as a political entity provide its citizens with a philosophy of life; it can only deprive man of his full personal dignity."

The church must be independent from the state in order to supply

Daladier Sets European Union as Aim

Allies' Fellowship To Be Open to All, Premier Says, When 'Hitlerism' Is Crushed

By P. J. Philip
Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Dec. 29.—Having pooled resources, and for the time at least sunk their national differences and rivalries, France and Great Britain are looking to the organization of Europe on a similar basis when Hitlerism is crushed, Premier Edouard Daladier declared in the Senate this afternoon. He suggested that other governments support a plan for creation of a European federation of states after peace comes.

"The community of action of the two empires," he said, "is established in an agreement of which the consequences are incalculable. We have dismissed the national egoist from our plan of action. Animated by the same ideal, pursuing the same ends, we have united in a common action, of which the goal is victory.

"Open to All"

"This agreement has been enlarged by the distribution on an equitable basis of all common charges and by the establishment of complete solidarity between our two moneys—the franc and the pound sterling. This Franco-British union is open to all. But I declare formally that without material and positive guarantees France will not lay down her arms.

"Just as I mistrust great Utopian conceptions, so am I partisan of material guarantees against the return of such events as those from which we are suffering today, and so also do I conceive that the new Europe should be given a wider organization than that which has existed until now.

"Commercial exchange must be multiplied and perhaps federative bonds envisioned between the different European states. We are ready, for our part, to collaborate with all those who pursue the same aims as ourselves. I shall add that all efforts of German propaganda to break this Franco-British solidarity will fail."

Plan Three Battleships

The upper house, which yesterday voted the 80,000,000,000-franc budget unanimously, was engaged in giving the same unanimous support to the government's demand for 259,000,000,000 francs credit for military expenditure during the year, with authority to spend 55,000,000,000 francs during the first three months. There was no opposition, but Daladier took the opportunity to review the situation and suggest what the future may hold.

Helsinki, Dec. 29.—Furious fighting with Red artillery and planes shelling and bombing their own men was reported in Finland tonight as the vast but vague Russian offensive showed little progress at the end of 30 days of undeclared war.

The Finnish command meantime announced that 900 Russians had been killed in two separate, unsuccessful threats on the Karelian Isthmus and that Finnish soldiers had captured quantities of war materials.

The story of confusion and deadly mistakes in Russian ranks in the Salla sector of central Finland was told by the Finnish News Agency.

First, new Russian guns were brought into action in what was meant to be another drive through the center of the little country. But the attack bogged down when Soviet planes and the new cannon rained death on their own infantrymen.

British reports also told of bloody and unexplained fighting between two Russian regiments in the Salla area. It was believed, however, that each regiment took the other for a Finnish unit.

There were unconfirmed reports that Joseph Stalin was moving ruthlessly to accelerate the creeping pace of the Russian attack.

Picked Men Sent

Picked troops of Russian sharpshooters accustomed to fighting on skis were said to be en route to the front from as far away as Siberia. Other hard-bitten battalions, experienced in dealing in guerrilla warfare now favored by the Finns in some sectors, were moving up from the Caucasus. Regiments of Cossack cavalry were being sent to replace the frosted tank battalions.

(Authoritative Soviet quarters in Moscow asked for comment on Scandinavian reports of revolt in the Red army in Finland, said tonight, "The report is so ridiculous there is no need for us to deny it." The same sources also denied the rumors abroad of Soviet troop concentrations on the Afghan border or in the Caucasus.)

Recent reports from Finland have told of a giant gun which regularly dropped shells on the important port of Viipuri. This was reported silenced last night.

"On the (Karelian) isthmus," the high command's communique said, "the enemy again attacked on December 28 at the northern end of Lake Hatjalahden and east of Summa. Both attacks were repulsed and altogether five enemy tanks were destroyed in addition to the two we captured.

"The enemy also resumed his attack on Kelja but was beaten off."

Pershing Lauds Army in First Message Since Retirement

A. E. F. Commander Expects War to Bar His Trip to Europe

Gen. John J. Pershing, in his first message to the Army since his retirement 15 years ago, yesterday congratulated the military service on its unusual accomplishments during the past year and expressed his "supreme confidence" in its successful operation.

The American Expeditionary Force commander, now in his eightieth year, said he had followed "the recent developments in the modernization of our national defense system . . . with much interest." The progress, he said, has been "very gratifying to me."

In a New Year's message to the service, in which he now holds the rare title of "General of the Armies of the United States," Pershing spoke of the "unusual and heavy demands" placed on the Army during 1939.

"I have supreme confidence in the success of its operation," he added, "because of my abiding faith in the fine personnel upon whom it depends."

Col. George Adamson, military secretary of Pershing since the World War, said the general was "very well," although handicapped by the weather.

"He likes to get out every day for a walk or an automobile ride," Adamson said, "but the snow has kept him inside for several days."

Now at Walter Reed Hospital for a rest and "check-up," Gen. Pershing expects to leave for Tucson within a few days, Col. Adamson said.

Gen. Pershing spent Christmas at Walter Reed receiving friends and expects to pass the week-end the same way.

Veterans Have 3 Days to Get $71,000,000

140,000 to 150,000 Must File Claims or Lose Shares by Default

Between 140,000 and 150,000 former service men have only three more days to decide whether they want about $71,000,000 in bonus money due them, or whether they will give it, by default, to the United States Treasury.

The veterans have until midnight Tuesday to file applications for a certificate claiming benefits under the adjusted compensation acts. Claims have been coming in at the rate of about 300 a month. The Veterans' Administration has no explanation why the large number have failed to enter claims in the 14 years they might have done so since passage of the legislation.

More alert veterans have received certificates entitling them, eventually, to benefits in cash and bonds of almost $3,000,000,000.

Applications may be obtained and filed at any veterans' facility, regional office, or War, Navy or Veterans' Administration headquarters here. The latter office will keep its lights burning until midnight, January 2, for the benefit of late comers.

The money due the veterans, but lost to them unless they secure their certificates before the deadline, will represent a net gain to Uncle Sam.

Some former service men who have failed to put in claims, the Administration believes, are entitled to the maximum amount of about $1,900. The average amount is between $500 and $1,000.

Hospital Says Fechner 'Is Slightly Improved'

Robert Fechner, 63, head of the Civilian Conservation Corps, who has been seriously ill at Walter Reed Hospital since November 20, is "getting along about the same, and if anything is slightly improved," hospital attaches asserted last night.

The CCC chief is suffering from heart trouble complicated by lung congestion, partially brought on by hard work, said his physician.

D. C. to Give 1940 Record Welcome

With traditional merrymaking mingling with the reverence born of new hope, Washington tomorrow night will greet 1940.

Advance reservations in hotels and night clubs point to one of the most gala New Year's Eve celebrations the District has seen in years, made gayer because of a record Christmas boom.

Outstanding among a score of watch night devotions throughout the city will be the inter-faith service on the steps of the Capitol. From 11:30 p. m. until one minute before the new year, hundreds of Catholics, Protestants and Jews are expected to kneel in meditation and prayer, and to hear inspiritational messages from leaders of the three faiths.

Night Spots to Be Full

Speakers on the program, arranged by the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital, will be the Rev. John K. Cartwright, D. D., rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception; the Rev. Albert J. McCartney, D. D., pastor of the Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, and Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation.

New Year's frolicking, always the occasion for explosive festivity, will parallel in spirit the cheer of the Christmas season, a check of "night spots" in Washington and nearby counties revealed.

"A near-sellout" crowd, hotel managers say, will jam ballrooms to frolic at cover charges ranging as high as $7.50 a place, drinks not included.

The prospect of only light wines and beer unti lafter the fateful hour of "Auld Lang Syne" has not dimmed enthusiasm locally but will be the signal, it has been reported, for "semi-legal" liquor sales at Prince Georges County night clubs. Likewise permissible will be stronger spirits at dozens of private clubs.

Innovations to attract merrymakers have been devised at a number of local entertainment places. One

Bridges Not A Communist, Landis Finds

Examiner Reports To Miss Perkins on Deportation Action

James M. Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School, who presided at the deportation hearing against Harry Bridges, West Coast maritime labor leader, yesterday held the evidence does not show Bridges is a Communist or affiliated with that party.

He submitted his finding in a letter to Secretary of Labor Perkins, who selected him as special examiner to conduct the hearings. The letter was written in transmitting a 152-page report on the investigation.

Landis made no recommendation as to deportation of the Australian, who has been active in ship labor disputes on the Pacific Coast.

He said that since his conclusion was that Bridges was not a Communist nor affiliated with that party, he did not deem it necessary to find "whether or not upon the extended evidence presented by this record,

3,000 Non-Aryans Get Brazilian Haven As Tribute to Pius

By Herbert L. Matthews
Copyright by New York Times

Vatican City, Dec. 29.—The Holy See has been quietly and unobtrusively helping converted Jews in countries where they are being persecuted for not being Aryans, it was learned today when details of a secretly printed "Yellow Book" were divulged. Among others, arrangements have been made with Brazil whereby 3,000 non-Aryan German Catholics are being allowed to immigrate as a special tribute to Pius XII.

This publication is intended solely for the use of the secretariat of state and is being distributed only to nuncios, apostolic delegates and other envoys of the Holy See outside the Vatican.

All the information in it is publicly known except that passage about the Vatican's efforts on behalf of persecuted Jews, which is to be found on page 25.

Intervention Disclosed

"The concern for non-Aryans has been part of the thoughts and activity of the Holy See in regard to social and international pacification," this passage reads.

"The Holy See, in fact, interesting itself in the fate of persons considered to be of non-Aryan stock and affected by the laws of some states, has intervened in a timely manner to seek to mitigate the pertinent legal provisions and also to make their applications less rigorous.

"Efforts have been made in various ways to alleviate the suffering

Nazi Freighter Tacoma May Be Given 24 Hours To Sail or Be Interned

By the Associated Press

Montevideo, Dec. 29.—President Alfredo Baldomir was reported tonight to have decided to give the German merchantman Tacoma, which took off the crew of the German raider Admiral Graf Spee before the warship was scuttled, 24 hours to leave port or be interned.

It was learned President Baldomir reached his decision after a conference with Foreign Minister Alberto Guani, but the date on which his decree will be promulgated was not ascertained.

The Tacoma still is anchored in Montevideo Harbor, with her swastika banner flying. She has been held here since the Graf Spee was blown up by her own captain December 17.

The decree also will order internment of four members of the Graf Spee's crew who remained aboard the Tacoma when two tugboats pulling barges steamed up the river

Death Rate for 1939 Lowest in U. S. History

There were fewer births than deaths in the United States in 1939, statisticians of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. reported yesterday. The country enjoyed unusually good health, and the death rate was the lowest in history.

"With the exception of 1938, when a balance between reproduction and mortality was reached, the . . . rate of natural increase has been in the red for seven years," they said.

First Lady Brings Son and Wife To White House After Crash

Mr., Mrs. Franklin, Jr., Suffered Only Cuts, Says Adm. McIntire

Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., and his wife were at the White House last night, nursing injuries received when their automobile crashed into a truck parked on the highway 23 miles east of Winchester, Va., early yesterday.

Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntire, White House physician, said the couple had suffered only "superficial face cuts."

They arrived at the White House at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Earlier Mrs. Roosevelt had gone to the Memorial Hospital at Winchester, where they had been taken by the driver of a delivery truck. She returned with them in a White House car.

Both Up and About

White House attaches said last night that, although the couple had been shaken up, their injuries appeared to be of minor nature. Both were said to be up and about.

Dr. Robert F. Cline, who treated them at the hospital, said young Mrs. Roosevelt, the former Ethel du Pont, had suffered a lacerated forehead and right ear, scratches and abrasions, and that her husband had lacerations on the forehead and right arm, a small cut on the upper left arm and scratches and abrasions.

The injuries, he said, apparently were caused by glass.

Each, he declared, suffered an identical front tooth broken in half.

State Trooper E. P. Landers, who investigated the accident, said he was told Mrs. Roosevelt "lost consciousness for a few moments immediately after the crash." She appeared, he said, to be the more seriously hurt of the two.

The accident occurred near Berry's Ferry, Clarke County, between

Hunger and Cold Raise Toll Of Dead in Quake to 50,000

By the Associated Press

Ankara, Dec. 29.—Hundreds of thousands of Turks tonight faced the possibility of death from starvation, cold and disease in quake-split Anatolia as blizzards and wrecked or snow-blocked communication lines combined to hinder rescuers.

The death toll was mounting hourly, and officials said it might reach 50,000.

The number of persons injured or suffering from exposure was believed to be at least 30,000.

Authorities predicted that more shocks might come in the next ten days.

Director Fatin, of the Istanbul Observatory said that this week's geological disturbance apparently occurred 16 miles below the surface of the earth and covered a wide area, and that as a result further movements might be expected before the strata settled.

Even if there should be no further shocks, it was felt certain that thousands of Wednesday's survivors would die before food and medical supplies could reach them.

Relief officials said that they had been forced to abandon all hope of bringing relief to some districts, and that they could only hope to reach the major points of disaster.

A rescue train reached Erzerum after snow plows assisted by 10,000 soldiers with shovels had cut through mountainous drifts of snow.

Week's 2d Snowstorm Hits City; Autos Hurt 3 Children on Sleds

Washington's second snow storm of the week struck last night, and will continue today, the Weather Bureau forecast. Slightly lower temperatures will follow tonight and tomorrow will be clear.

Three children were injured, one severely, in collisions while coasting yesterday. Two Gaithersburg, Md., men also sustained injuries when the car in which they were riding skidded and struck a culvert in Silver Spring, Md.

The thermometer, hovering near the 30-degree mark since 3 p. m. Thursday, was expected by the Weather Bureau to drop to 28 degrees shortly before sunrise today.

Richard Harrison, colored, 13, of 1249 Union street southwest, was struck by an automobile when he coasted from a vacant lot into Stafford's court southwest. He was taken to Casualty Hospital, where doctors said he suffered a dislocated shoulder, a possible fractured skull and cuts.

Two brothers coasting double on a sled at Gallaudet and Kendall streets northeast, slid into an automobile operated by John E. Switzer, 24, of 453 Manor place northwest.

The boys, William and Moses Thomas, 12 and 11, respectively, of 1881 Kendall street, were taken to Casualty Hospital. William was treated for a broken right leg and cuts, his brother for minor cuts

Dr. Joseph Thomas Waters, 37, was treated at Washington Sanitarium for severe lacerations about the head, and Joseph Nils German, 20, who was riding with Waters, was treated for shock.

1939 In Review

Future historians will not be able to pass lightly over 1939. Too many important events occurred. In Sunday's Post there will be many special articles presenting a panorama of the major happenings in 1939; in Washington, the nation and the world; in sports, art, civic developments, politics and war.

Treasury Aides Predict Budget 'Surprises'

May Show Deficit Of 2½ Billion, Drop of Billion From 1940's

By Felix Cotten.

President Roosevelt's budget estimates, to be submitted to Congress next week, may show a deficit for the 1941 fiscal year of $2,500,000,000 or less, a reduction of well over $1,000,000,000 below the probable deficit for the current fiscal year, it was learned yesterday.

Mr. Roosevelt will deliver his annual "State of the Nation" message in person to a joint session of the House and Senate in the House chamber at theopening of the session next Wednesday. The budget message will be sent up by messenger the next day.

Reliable reports indicate that the estimates will show substantial economies, while anticipated revenues, due to improved business conditions, will be from $500,000,000 to $750,000,000 greater than this year's expectations.

Arrived at Figure

Asked at his press conference if he had arrived at a budget figure, President Roosevelt yesterday replied that he had. He would not disclose the figure, but said it was good.

Treasury officials predicted the budget message which sets forth proposed Government expeditures and revenue expectations for next fiscal year, would contain "surprises."

The estimates, according to some reliable calculations, may show between $1,100,000,000 and $1,350,000,000 in savings, offset in part by increases in proposed outlays for national defense totaling between $250,000,000 and $500,000,000.

Indications are that probably the outstanding cut will be in WPA estimates, which are expected to total $1,000,000,000, a reduction of nearly $500,000,000. An equal cut may be made in estimates for public works. Sharp reductions are contemplated in expenditures for the National Youth Administration, the Civilian Conservation Corps, and other agencies popular in Congress.

The deficit for the current fiscal year, which will end July 1, is estimated at $3,700,000,000 or $3,800,000,000. If revenue estimates, which total $5,700,000,000 for the current year, are hiked by $500,000,000, and a net $500,000,000 reduction is made in anticipated expenditures, the estimated deficit for the 1941 year will total $2,700,000,000 or $2,800,000,000. Additional savings or increases in revenue expectations would cut the figure further.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, said yesterday talk of "balancing the budget" without making a drastic cut in national defense expenditures was "sheer political maneuvering."

The President discussed the legislative program yesterday with Speaker Bankhead, who declined, however, to reveal any of the details.

Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, second ranking Democrat on the House Labor Committee, told the President that, in his opinion, the main trouble with the Wagner labor act was the way the National Labor Relations Board had administered it.

Advocates Shakeup

He said there should be a drastic shake-up in the personnel of the board, or else it should be abolished by Congress.

A bloc of Southern Democrats is being organized, it was revealed, to fight any appropriation to pay for the upkeep of the board until the President changes the personnel. Ramspeck feared a political boomerang in the 1940 elections unless this is done.

The President last January estimated a deficit for the current fiscal year of $3,326,000,000. This has been revised upward $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 due to extra-budgetary appropriations by Congress and deficiency appropriations made necessary at the coming session of Congress by the war. Expenditures this fiscal year may total $9,500,000,000.

Mr. Roosevelt's message on the state of the Nation will be broadcast over radio station WJSV from 2 to 2:30 p. m. next Wednesday. It will be rebroadcast by means of transcription that evening from 10:30 to 11 o'clock.

The 39-year-old CIO leader, who came into labor prominence during the 1934 maritime strikes of the West Coast, came to the United States from Australia in 1920.

The hearing afforded Bridges an opportunity to show cause why he should not be deported and the Government was faced with the obligation of proving two essential points to win its case.

It was reqquired to prove: First, that Bridges was a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with it at the time warrant was served upon him in March, 1938. Secondly, the Government was required to prove that if Bridges was a member or was affiliated with the party that the organization advocated the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

Drought Forces U. S. to Suspend Wheat Exports

Philippine Islands Are Exempted From Agriculture Order

Serious drought developments, a high Agriculture Department official said last night, have led the department to suspend its wheat and flour export program to all countries except the Philippine Islands.

Announcing the suspension yesterday, the department stated "there is no burdensome surplus of wheat in the United States at the present time."

The officials said the actual situation is more alarming than this observation would indicate, and that next year's crop, due to drought, is expected to be millions of bushels below this year.

Netherlands Chief Buyer

Further, this source said, sharply rising imports of American wheat and flour into the Netherlands indicates much of it has been transshipped to other nations, including Germany. The department was fearful war shipments would seriously deplete this Nation's surplus.

"When they get to Rotterdam, the shipments become lost," the official said. Since July, the Netherlands have come out in front as the chief purchaser of American wheat, with Belgium second, and the United Kingdom third.

Total exports have decreased in the past few months, with beginning of the European war, because domestic prices rose and sales within the country were more advantageous than sales at export prices.

In a statement to the press, the Department said:

"The relatively large reserves now on hand will be available for use in this country if dry weather continues in some of the wheat producing regions."

It added that it seemed advisable to continue the flour export program to the Philippine Commonwealth via Pacific coast ports, because of a surplus in the Northwest region and "because of the United States' particular interest in trade with the Philippines."

U. S. To Need Supplies

The Department official, in an informal statement later said that supplies are satisfactory now, and would probably remain so next summer, but added: "We will have considerable need for all we have, and we can use it all domestically."

During the 1938-39 fiscal year about 118,000,000 bushels of wheat and flour were sold for export, Secretary Wallace reported.

"With the removal of this quantity from the domestic market, the United States wheat carryover was held down to 254,000,000 bushels on June 30," he said. "This made it possible to conduct the current year's wheat and flour export programs on a very conservative basis."

Survey Urges Labor, Business, Farmers To Unite on Problem

By the Associated Press

The American Federation of Labor said yesterday that getting the unemployed back to work was the No. 1 economic problem for 1940, and suggested a conference of business, labor and consumer representatives for cooperative action to that end.

If industrial production could be increased 25 per cent above the 1929 level, the A. F. L.'s monthly survey of business said, there would be jobs for virtually all the 9,000,000 unemployed and a higher general standard of living for the entire population.

"As we look forward to the task of increasing production and putting the unemployed to work one point stands out clearly," the review added. "Private industry cannot plan to increase production without some assurance as to the future.

"In the present circumstances, with war in Europe and a Presidential election ahead, certainty as to the future is, of course, not possible. It is possible, however, for a conference of responsible representatives from business, labor, farmers and consumers to lay the basis for cooperation to increase production and thus to give more assurance as to the future than could otherwise be possible."

The review said it was not unreasonable to look for an increase in production to a level 25 per cent above 1929 within "a short space of time." In the decade from 1919 to 1929, it said, industrial production increased 43 per cent. For the full year 1939, it added, production was 11 per cent below 1929, although 1929 peaks were exceeded in the last quarter of this year.

Along with increased production, there should be some gradual further shortening of work hours, if the unemployed are to be absorbed, it said. A drop in the average work week from 50 hours in 1929 to 40 hours in 1939 was credited with preventing technological unemployment for 3,000,000 in the last decade.

As to the outlook for 1940, the review said business forecasters expected the year to average 5 per cent above 1939, but that it would probably start with some slackening off from the level of this month.

Wage and Hour Aide Announces Chicago Settlement

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Thomas O'Malley, regional director of the wage-and-hour division of the United States Department of Labor, announced today the Hump Hairpin Manufacturing Co., of Chicago had agreed to restore more than $100,000 in back wages to about 300 employes.

He said it was the largest restitution case involving a single company since enforcement of the fair labor standards act began October 24, 1938.

Workers will collect an average of $300, O'Malley said. In one case, $800 will be restored.

Shortly before O'Malley made his announcement, Federal Judge John P. Barnes signed a consent decree ordering the company and its affiliate, the Chain Store Products Corporation, to stop immediately the employment of child labor, to pay not less than 30 cents an hour, and to pay time and a half for overtime in excess of 42 hours a week.

O'Malley said investigation by his office and the Federal Children's Bureau disclosed the company had, over 15 years, developed a homework system in which 500 children, ranging from 5 to 15, were employed.

The company voluntarily agreed to abolish its home work system, O'Malley said, although there is no such requirement in the law.

Company Unions Upheld

Philadelphia, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Third U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals held today that "so-called 'company' unions" are as legal as those of the American Federation of Labor or the Congress of Industrial Organizations if they are not dominated by an employer.

The ruling, delivered by Judge Francis Biddle, former chairman of the old Labor Relations Board, set aside a National Labor Relations Board order on the Swank Products Co., Attleboro, Mass., jewelry manufacturers, to disestablish its "Swank Products Employes Association."

An affiliate of the A. F. of L. charged it was "company dominated."

The fact that the association is an "inside union" does not make it illegal, Judge Biddle said, adding:

"The evidence in this case shows, we think, a genuine, if rare, attempt on the part of the employes to form their own intramural union, to prevent what they considered might be a less advantageous external organization bringing them to the lower level of competing shop conditions."

The party was attended by Count Jerzy Potocki, Polish Ambassador; members of his staff and others prominent in Washington and northern Virginia society.

The truck was parked on a foggy stretch of road between the Shenandoah river and the Blue Ridge Mountains. Highways in this section have been made slippery by ice and snow.

The couple was on the way to Washington at the time. Landers said young Roosevelt apparently saw the truck too late to avoid it.

The motor of the sedan young Roosevelt was driving, he declared, was driven underneath the rear of the truck, while the hood smashed through the windshield. A wrecker, he said, had considerable difficulty separating the two vehicles.

The truck, a large transport owned by the National Fruit Products Co., of Winchester, was driven by Franklin Seal, 30, of that town. Seal told Landers his lights were on at time of the accident. Damage to the truck was slight. Its occupants were not hurt.

Seal was released in custody of his employer pending an investigation.

Young Roosevelt called Dr. McIntire from the hospital. The couple had walked into the hospital unassisted. Mrs. Roosevelt left for Winchester shortly after 8 o'clock after being notified by Dr. McIntire.

She summoned a Washington physician to consult with Dr. Cline as to whether the couple should remain at the hospital. Dr. McIntire recommended that Dr. Morton D. Willcutts, a Navy physician who performed an appendectomy on young Mrs. Roosevelt more than a year ago, go to Winchester.

The Roosevelts, who make their home at Charlottesville, where Franklin, jr., is a law student at the University of Virginia, had been spending the holidays at the White House. They had left their infant son, Franklin Roosevelt 3d, there.

Farley Calls Party Chiefs to Set Convention

Action Ends Waiting Contest With G.O.P.; Session to Be Feb. 5

A meeting of the Democratic National Committee February 5 to fix the time and place of the next Democratic National Convention was summoned last night by Chairman James A. Farley.

The announcement ended a long-waiting contest between Farley and Republican National Committee Chairman John Hamilton, who have been jockeying for convention position.

Hamilton now is expected to issue a similar call for the Republican National Committee to meet at a later date, probably around mid-February.

Since the President at Warm Springs first threw out suggestions for a shortened campaign and delay of conventions past the usual June dates, Republicans have been bidding to have the last say in convention platform building and choice of candidates.

Still May Set Late Date

Farley moved first of the two party chairmen and slated his committee meeting first. But this does not preclude Democratic committeemen from setting their convention so late that the Republicans cannot "outwait" them.

At the last meeting of the Republican executive committee, party leaders reached a virtual understanding on a late July meeting date, a month beyond the usual time in June. The last week in July or the first week in August was suggested as the very latest Republicans could meet and still organize an effective campaign.

But Chairman Hamilton and other party leaders have claimed they should have the right to meet last as the minority party. This would give Republicans a chance to look over the Democratic platform and ticket before choosing their own. Unless the Democratic committee sets its own convention date far beyond the Republican deadline, G. O. P. committeemen still will bid for the last say.

Farley's call for the Democratic committee meeting to be held at the Willard Hotel here was announced in a 70-word statement by the committee's publicity bureau.

Also to Select City

"The purpose of the meeting is to select a city, fix the time, and make other preliminary arrangements for the national convention to be held next week," it said. "Letters to members of the national committee, notifying them of the meeting, were sent forward by Mr. Farley today."

Democrats in recent years invariably have convened after the Republican convention, knowing in advance the rival party's nominees and campaign platform.

To offset this advantage, Republicans were discussing a later meeting next year when the suggestion came for Warm Springs that both parties hold late conventions and avoid a long campaign. Republican convention plans were plunged into uncertainty again and will continue unsettled until the Democratic date is set.

Late August Favored

Farley himself has been silent on the question, but some Democratic leaders, including the President, are said to favor a late August Democratic convention, cutting the campaign to two months. Influential Republicans oppose a G. O. P. convention that late, believing it would afford too short a campaign period effectively to sell their candidate.

If Democrats select the late August date, responsible observers here believe the Republicans will ignore Democratic plans and proceed with a late July or early August convention. They believe the President's third term stand, the principal Republican reason for delay, will be known before that time.

Chicago, Philadelphia and San Francisco figure among cities said to be bidding for the conventions of both parties. City selections usually are made on the basis of the highest monetary attraction and politically strategic location. Both parties met at Chicago in 1932 and an avid contest for the Midwest farm vote has led to serious consideration of that city again.

Roosevelt Will Name Bell As Treasury Undersecretary

Hanes Suggests He Be Made Permanent as Second to Morgenthau

President Roosevelt announced yesterday that Daniel W. Bell, Government career man and former acting budget director, would be named Undersecretary of the Treasury to succeed John W. Hanes, who recently resigned.

The announcement immediately was acclaimed by Hanes and Senator Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

Hanes, in fact, said he wished Congress would make Bell a permanent Undersecretary.

"We are most fortunate," he declared, "in having a career man in the Treasury so well equipped to take over the responsibilities of this important office."

Harrison expressed keen regret that Hanes, a former Wall Street investment banker, has resigned. He was delighted, however, he said that Bell would be his successor.

"Bell has been in the Treasury," he declared, "almost as long as I have been in Congress, and I have found him to be of invaluable assistance on every occasion when his advice and cooperation have been requested. His character, integrity and ability have won for him a place of high esteem in both political parties."

Harrison's message was relayed to Washington from his home at Gulfport, Miss.

Bell's civil service status will not be affected by his taking an appointive office. He will not lose retirement privileges. He will continue contributions to the Government retirement fund.

Since his resignation as acting budget director, he has served as Assistant to the Secretary in charge of finances and the Treasury Department fiscal offices.

Wallace Hints Boston Perils Milk for Needy

Attacks Order Raising Price of Distribution; Would Affect 200,000

By the Associated Press

Secretary Wallace said yesterday the Agriculture Department would withdraw its financial support of a surplus milk distribution program affecting 200,000 persons in greater Boston unless the Massachusetts milk control board reconsidered an order setting a minimum price for handling hilk.

Referring to an order of the board establishing a 2-cent a quart minimum for handling, Wallace declared:

"Since the ruling would bring about an unwarranted price increase for handling, the department will feel obliged to withdraw from financial support of the program if the ruling were to stand."

Daily surplus milk distribution in the Boston area, Wallace said, now is 65,000 quarts, needy persons obtaining milk for 5 and 7 cents a quart.

Saying he was "amazed" at the Bay State board's action, Wallace said that unless it was revoked "it will deny dairy farmers an increased market for about 65,000 quarts a day. Most important of all," he added in a statement, "it will deny badly needed milk to a large number of low income families."

He estimated also that 500 WPA workers had been employed in milk depots throughout the area.

Agriculture officials said they estimated the 2-cent charge for handling each quart of milk would boost the expense of the program $60,000 for a six-month period. They added that previously the milk had been handled for slightly less than 1.5 cents a quart.

Wallace pointed out also that he believed the order conflicted with Federal regulations requiring Federal agencies to obtain competitive bids for contracts by setting a minimum rate.

Under the program persons receiving direct relief and on State and municipal welfare rolls have been eligible to purchase milk for 5 cents. WPA workers have paid 7 cents.

The program is part of the Agriculture Department's surplus removal program and communities sharing in it pay costs of processing and bottling the milk.

Panama Canal Receipts Gain, Woodring Says

U. S. Nets a Return Of 3% on Waterway Cost in 12 Months

By the Associated Press

Secretary Woodring reported yesterday the heaviest year of traffic for the Panama Canal in a decade, which he said netted a return of nearly 3 per cent on the cost of the waterway.

A total of 5,903 ocean-going commercial vessels made the trip in the fiscal 12 months ended June 30, Woodring said in his annual report to President Roosevelt.

"This was the highest number of commercial transits since 1929 and the fourth highest since the canal was opened to commerce," he said.

Tolls totaled $23,661,021 and cargoes 27,866,627 long tons, a 2 per cent increase.

Combined net revenues were estimated at $14,522,343, which represented a 2.56 per cent return to the United States on a capital investment of $508,346,823.

In the 25 years since the canal was opened, Woodring said it had proven to be "an unqualified success." In that period 104,417 ships passed through it, paying $433,048,858 in tolls.

Of the commercial vessels using the canal last year, those of American registry carried 35.6 per cent of the cargoes. British ships carried 24.4 per cent, Japanese 6.1, German 5.3, Swedish 3.6 and the remainder distributed among some 15 countries.

The Panama Railroad Co., operating rail lines and a steamship service to New York, reported a net profit of $1,387,559. It has just placed in service three steamers costing about $13,000,000.

Woodring also reported "notable" progress in improving rivers and harbors and controlling floods.

FBI Searches Nation for Train Wrecker

ICC Blames Crash Of Rail Streamliner On Expert Saboteur

By International News Service

A large force of G-men last night pressed a nation-wide search for a "professional saboteur" blamed today by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the wrecking of the fleet Southern Pacific streamliner "City of San Francisco" in Nevada, August 12, with the loss of 24 lives.

A Justice Department spokesman said the FBI is continuing its search "until it finds the party or parties responsible," though the ICC yesterday closed its books on the case with the finding that the wreck was caused by "malicious tampering with the track."

Commissioner W. J. Patterson, in charge of the ICC Bureau of Safety, which made the investigation, said:

"It was plainly the work of a professional—a man who knew exactly what he was doing. All the facts support this conclusion. It was no amateur, crank or unbalanced person, as at first supposed. It could well have been a 'peace-time saboteur.'"

Substitution Is Cited

Patterson made the disclosure following announcement earlier by the commission that "malicious tampering" had caused the disastrous wreck, in which several cars plunged from their tracks at a bridgehead, injuring 115 persons.

Following an intensive probe of four and one-half months the commission rendered its findings in a report from the safety bureau director, November 13. The evidence included scientific detail covering the removal of angle bars and numerous tie spikes, and substitution of a defective tie plate.

George J. Stanley, vice-president of the Aluminum Company of America, said in a statement that the investigation "demonstrated conclusively the excellent manner in which the aluminum alloys" used in the train's passenger cars can stand up under "terrific impact."

"It also proved to be a thorough test and justification of the design and construction of the train," Stanley added.

The commission itself said the company's tests showed the alloy material was well above the minimum requirements, then commented:

"These cars withstood impact shock up to a certain degree, beyond which there was practically a total collapse; there appeared to be no intermediate stage of damage.

"The aluminum alloy sheathing, which forms a part of the girder construction of the side cars, manifested a tearing characteristic, in that the metal readily tore loose from the rivets. . . . There was but little indication of dispersion of strain."

Merit for 250,000 To Be Pressed

Hatch act would require all State agencies receiving Federal funds to select their employes on a merit basis, approved by the Civil Service Commission.

He said this automatically would subject such employes to the politics ban included in all Civil Service rules and at the same time would require State employes to meet tests of competence not provided in the new Hatch bill.

The House Civil Service chairman said he will ask his Civil Service Committee to report this measure, and seek action this session in the House.

"The Federal Government is giving the States hundreds of millions for highways, social security, health, vocational education and farm surplus removal," said Ramspeck, "and it is proper that standards be set for employes administering them."

In his call on the President, Ramspeck stressed the need of adequate appropriations to finance personnel coordination and systematized employment measures already launched. The President last year set out a program requiring Federal agencies to name personnel directors and created a council of personnel administration to study systematized methods, in-service training and transfer and promotion systems.

Ramspeck pointed out Congress failed to provide funds to finance the program, although most of the agencies, despite fund handicaps, have named personnel directors.

The Georgian's civil service coverage bill, set for early House consideration, closely follows the President's first reorganization plan recommendations, except in one major respect. It would leave intact the present 3-man, bi-partisan Civil Service Commission.

The President originally asked abolition of the commission and substitution of a single civil service administrator. Civil service features were dropped from the reorganization bill enacted at the last regular session of Congress.

Martha Raye Grins, Admits She Likes Her Comedy Roles

Martha Raye arrived in Washington yesterday for a personal appearance. She posed like this and we got a chance to see what she really is like. Martha said she didn't mind contorting her pretty features and declared that she liked the comedy screen roles the studio gives her

Actress of the Wide Smile Arrives In Capital, a Veteran Trouper of 20 Years' Experience, Even if She's Only 23

Martha Raye smiled narrowly and naturally—then split her face in a professionally cavernous grin, exclaiming:

"I admit it's no rosebud—my mouth, I mean."

But Martha doesn't mind the characterizations that necessitate her constantly contorting otherwise pretty features into the gargoyle appearance of a frenzied jitterbug.

"No, I never played straight parts and I don't want to; I like this comedy role," declared the comedienne.

However limited her repertoire of roles, Martha knows her show business from way back. Born in Butte, Mont., 23 years ago of trouping parents, she was a part of the theater from that day on.

Wardrobe Trunk For Bed

A wardrobe trunk was her bed for years, she says. She didn't go to school, but was taught by her mother between acts.

It was at the age of 3 she settled down to her career. She joined her parents in a dancing act. When 5, she sang her first song over the footlights.

At 12 she was in revues on Loew's circuit, and at 15, a full-fledged vaudevillian with a troupe touring the country.

Martha still gets a kick from memories of how she broke into the movies. She had been doing the drunk-singing act that she made famous in "Rhythm on the Range" for more than six months at one Hollywood night club, but the big shots never noticed her. Then one night she did the same routine at another club's charity show, and one of the same directors who had watched her apathetically for half a year snapped her up.

She's Doing All Right

After four years, she is "doing all right," she admits. She can't reveal her income (reliably reported to be one of the highest of any comedienne)—"they won't let me; something about income tax, or something." But that isn't the main thing, anyway—it's the fun you get out of it, she believes.

She was a little disappointed she didn't have a party thrown for her like another group of actresses had on hitting the Capital the other day.

But she isn't going to let that get her down. She's going to have a whale of a time looking at "Lindbergh's airplane over in that museum."

The White House Handshake Will Be Missing, but Not John

John W. Hunefeld, more chipper than ever, will make his annual New Year's trek to the White House portico Monday morning for a Presidential handshake he knows he won't get.

There's simply no downing jolly John, a Peter Pannish painter in his seventies who still works for his living, refuses to grow old and is determined to keep up a tradition he began in 1925.

"Yes, indeed, I'll be on deck New Year's morning," he chortled yesterday, brushing a luxuriant mustache by which White House correspondents and police can spot him at a great distance.

"Shucks, it was all right with me when President Roosevelt discontinued the receptions to the public back in 1934. All those handshakes are tough on any man, whether he's President or not. But, just the same, I'm going to keep on being No. 1 visitor on New Year's mornings, just in case."

Calvin Coolidge was in the White House when Hunefeld first began the ritual 15 years ago come Monday. He was No. 1 in the reception line right down the years, until Mr. Roosevelt discontinued a custom which had its beginning in President John Adams' Administration.

Technically, though, he was No. 2 in 1925 and 1926, each time yielding the honor position to a woman, bowing gallantly as he exchanged places. In 1931 he stood in the rain 6 hours and 20 minutes, refusing persistent invitations of guards, acting on President Hoover's orders, to obtain shelter inside the White House.

"It wouldn't have been fair," said Hunefeld.

He lives at 225 C street northeast and is a widower. Hale and hearty, he was working yesterday on a house-painting job. He playfully parries questions about his age, but throws out two clews: He began growing the mustache more than 40 years ago in Portsmouth, N. H. his old home, and he voted for Grover Cleveland.

"There now, young fellow," he chuckled, "I'll be seeing you at the White House Monday morning—if you get up early enough."

President Willing To Confer With Protestant Chiefs

President Roosevelt said yesterday that if leaders of Protestant groups which are not members of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, wished to talk to him about promoting peace he would be glad to see them.

After his designation of Myron C. Taylor as his personal representative to the Vatican for purposes of working toward peace, Mr. Roosevelt conferred with a leader of the council and a leader of the Jewish faith.

Protestant groups which do not have full membership in the council, Mr. Roosevelt explained, are the Southern Baptists, with 4,800,000 members; Southern Presbyterians, with 500,000; Lutherans, with 4,000,000, and the Episcopalians, whose membership he could not recall. In addition, he continued, there are many smaller denominations which are not affiliated.

Orlando, Fla., Dec. 29 (AP).—George Henry Garlick, 60, was arrested at his winter home in nearby Mount Dora today in connection with a lottery that Federal Commissioner Alex Dailey said had fleeced the American public of $50,000,000.

The charge was based on Garlick's activities in originating and promoting the Grand National horse race charity fund of Liverpool, England, Postal Inspector Tennyson Jefferson, of Boston, said.

Garlick posted $15,000 bond on a Federal warrant issued at Boston. He waived a preliminary hearing.

The warrant charged Garlick with being a fugitive from justice, and with conspiracy to violate the postal laws.

The District Commissioners yesterday distributed promotions to three municipal employes as New Year gifts.

Davis, administrative assistant to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, was promoted to executive secretary, and Jennings B. Popkins, a clerk in the auditor's office, was boosted to chief pay roll clerk in the same office.

Healy, who has been with the surveyor's office since 1921, when he worked as a chainman at a $700 yearly salary, will receive $5,600. Miss Davis, a niece of Commissioner Hazen, will receive $3,200, a $600 increase. Popkins was raised from $1,680 to $2,300.

The new District surveyor was brought to the District employ by Commissioner Hazen, who was then the surveyor. Healy succeeds Carl E. Pelz, who was elevated to the job not more than two and a half months ago.

Miss Davis filled the vacancy created by the appointment of William Meredith to the board. She has been with the agency since its inception in 1934. Popkins succeeds W. H. Hipkins, who retired last week.

The Commissioners appointed Culver B. Chamberlain, president of the Cathedral Heights-Cleveland Park Citizens Association, a member of the Board of Zoning Adjustment. He fills the vacancy created by the death of Dean John R. Lapham, of the George Washington University School of Engineering. The appointment is for the unexpired term which ends October 17, 1942.

Recommended for the position by Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of Maryland, and several local attorneys, Chamberlain is a graduate of the National University and for the past two years has served with the legal aid bureau.

The adjustment board recently has been under fire from residents in the Cleveland Park area over the board's granting of a zoning variance to erect a gasoline station near the Bureau of Standards on Connecticut avenue.

Chamberlain represents his association in the Federation of Citizens Associations and is a member of its committee on law and legislation and the committee on public utilities.

Navy Relieves Reservists in Civil Positions

Officers and Men Are Excepted From Military Duties

Naval officials revealed yesterday that a number of leaders of the Naval and Marine Corps Reserve are being relieved of their posts because they also hold key civil positions in the naval service.

A survey has been made of all naval civilian employees who are members of the reserve. All those whose civil job is considered of paramount importance in time of war have to give up his military assignment.

The Marine reserve battalion here is losing three commissioned officers and about 30 non-commissioned officers and enlisted men, while the Naval Reserve battalion loses its commanding officer and some 20 petty officers and men.

Lieut. Col. Harvey Miller, local Marine Reserve commander, said Capt. John A. Augustine, commander of Company A, Capt. Troy A. Nubson, battalion quartermaster, and Lieut. Arthur E. Harper, leader of the band, are being relieved of active status.

Augustine is in charge of one of the sections at Naval Research Laboratory, Bellevue, D. C. Nubson is chief clerk of Marine Corps Headquarters, and Harper holds a civil post in the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. Supply Sergt. Charles Playfair, employed at the Navy Yard, also is being relieved, it was said.

The Naval Reserve battalion commander, Lieut. Comdr. J. E. Sullivan, officials said, has been transferred to the unorganized reserve and has been relieved by Lieut. Francis S. Kirk. Sullivan is a civil employe of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics.

Chief Water Tender J. B. Moody, employed at the Navy Yard, also will be lost to the local unit. One other commissioned officer probably soon will be detached.

Date Set to Open Klingle House Bids

Bids for leasing of the Klingle House, a ten-room graystone manse in Rock Creek Park, will be accepted until January 15, when they will be opened, the National Capital Parks office announced yesterday.

Specifications provide that no bid of less than $2,400 annual rent for the historic residence, atop one of the highest hills in the park, will be considered. The lessee must carry fire and windstorm insurance of $19,500 on the property.

The lease is being offered for a five-year term beginning February 1, 1940.

Peril of New Versailles Seen If U. S. Fights

Short War Would Evoke New Hitler, Historian Declares

United States," he declared.

Declaring President Wilson's diplomatic victories before the World War permitted European neutrals to "breathe a little easier," Dr. Baxter said the neutrality act and the imposition of combat zones had been "little short of disastrous" to neutral Old World nations.

"Our combat zones around Britain and France, and especially in the North Sea, have . . . given a green light to Germany to engage in submarine warfare there," he said.

Against Changing Horses

The Pittman act as well as earlier neutrality legislation, he continued, go beyond confines of international law, but "generally, it has been found inadvisable to make new rules which work to the disadvantage of one set of belligerents."

"To many of us," he added, "it seemed unwise for a neutral government to extend its responsibility beyond the requirements of international law."

Pointing to restrictions placed upon American shipping by the Pittman act, he asked "In the event of recognition of a state of war in eastern Asia would the United States be as ready to abdicate its rights there as it has been in the European controversy?"

Britain and France would commit a grave error if they attempted to dictate the form of Germany's government after a victory in the present war, a distinguished historian and Zionist here for the historians' meeting, said.

Would "Acclimatize" Nazis

Dr. Hans Kohn, author of numerous works on European and Asiatic history and a veteran of Austria's World War army, believes postwar Germany "should be allowed any form of government it wants, even national socialism."

Erection of a complete collective security system would deprive the new Germany of any hope of success in aggression against its neighbors, he explained. "Then give Germany 50 years to get acclimatized to the liberal, rational philosophy of western Europe, and her internal organization will take care of itself."

Dr. Kohn, now a professor at Smith College, discussed Europe's postwar settlement in an interview after his address to the American Historical Association.

His paper pictured Hitler's Reich as the result of historical accident rather than any inherent desire in Germans for absolute government.

In the early nineteenth century after Napoleon's rise, he recalled, German liberals contended that the French people were fundamentally inclined toward one-man rule.

An Accident Cited

That the German Emperior Frederick III, a product of the liberalism of 1848, died only six months after coming to the throne, goes farther to explain the rise of Hitler than any mystical discussion of Germany's soul, blood or soil, he asserted.

Frederick's father, schooled in the Prussian tradition, lived to be 91, he pointed out. "There was certainly no innate characteristic of the German people demanding that Frederick should have cancer and that William I should not," he added.

Historical accidents of this nature, he contended, have isolated modern Germany from the main stream of the rational philosophy of cooperation, driving Germans to the search for peculiarities in their own character, society and problems.

Dr. Hu-Shih, Chinese Ambassador to the United Ctates and a noted philosopher, told another session of the conference that China "is achieving a modernity undreamed of" by Japan.

In the intellectual sphere, he declared, China "has encouraged honest doubt and free criticism even in matters touching the most sacred and time-honored institutions."

Japanese intellectuals have been prosecuted and punished "for having suggested that certain sacred treasures at a certain Shinto shrine might be of doubtful authenticity," he pointed out.

Dr. Hu asserted that in China "in the absence of centralized control from above, cultural changes of basic importance may take place through the process of free contact and slow diffusion."

Japan, despite 70 years of "marvelously rapid change in the militaristic industrial system," preserves with artificial restraints a static culture.

W. C. T. U. Leader To Quaff 'Sobering' New Year Toast

Evanston, Ill., Dec. 29 (AP).—Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, national president of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, will toast the new year with "amethyst drinks."

She chose the term to describe her nonalcoholic fruit punch because the ancient Greeks considered the amethyst a remedy for intoxication.

Mrs. Smith is serving the punch at a traditional New Year's Day reception for fellow workers.

'Very Eventful 1940' Is Wished for Roosevelt

Newsmen wish President Roosevelt a "very eventful 1940."

Expressed at yesterday's press conference by Earl Godwin, president of the White House Correspondents Association, the remark drew laughter from the President and reporters.

The President asked why they were so equivocal.

"I guess we learn it around here," was the reply.

Separation Involves Danger of Fascism, Philosophers Hear

this philosophy of life, he went on. "There can be no alliance between the church and the modern state because it is so different from anything we have known before."

In his paper Father Hart asserted that only for a brief period in the Middle Ages did anything approaching normal relations between church and state appear in the West, "and today there is no hope or desirability of return," he declared.

The Right Rev. Mgr. Fulton J. Sheen, of Catholic University, was elected vice president of the association at the business meeting in McMahon Hall. Dr. Francis E. McMahon, outgoing vice president, was named president, and Father Hart was reelected secretary treasurer for his tenth term. Dr. Mortimer Adler, of Chicago University, was elected to the executive council.

Other papers presented yesterday, the final day of the association's fifteenth annual meeting, dealt with "The Philosophy of the Totalitarian State," by Waldemar Gurian, and "The Corporative State," by Joseph Cook.

Pointing out that the totalitarian state is different from the authoritarian state, Dr. Gurian said its features were a ruling party, an obligatory political philosophy or religion, a public opinion created by the rulers, and the concentration of power. He said it resulted from secularization of society.

The corporative state Dr. Cook described as analogous to the human body, consisting of related autonomous bodies working together in unity of effort atnd direction for the public welfare and the common good.

At a round-table discussion of the philosophy of law and government yesterday afternoon Brendan Brown emphasized the necessity of social control over private property in order to impose social duties on the production of wealth.

This "disciplinary process" must not deny the right of private property, he pointed out, but confine itself to regulating its exercise.

Other round-table topics were "The Metaphysical Basis of Political Action," led by John Fitzgerald and Thomas A. Joyce, and the "History of Philosophy," led by Charles O'Neill and Emmanuel Chapman.

The subject for next year's meeting was announced as "The Problem of Liberty." The topic was selected as the principal problem emerging from the discussions at the meetings yesterday and Thursday. Next year's meeting will be held December 30 and 31 in Detroit, Mich.

France Still A Democracy, Attache Says

Charles Lucet, second secretary of the French Embassy, with solemn demeanor and halting English, yesterday "dispelled the illusion" that his nation at war had abandoned the democratic form of government.

In an address to the Loyal Knights of the Round Table here, Lucet declared that evenyone could "be sure that France shall never become the land of fascism."

France keeps intact its constitution, "but the exigencies of war have compelled her to abridge for a while certain privileges and to impose upon herself a discipline which will automatically relax as soon as peace is re-established," he asserted.

Concerning the suspension of the Communist Party there, Lucet asserted:

"No measure was more necessary and none more universally approved. The Communist Party, that which upholds the conflict between the classes, and denies the very spirit of our regime, has never fitted very well in a democracy, but became well nigh impossible at the time of the Stalinian treason."

He said "it was difficult enough in peace time to tolerate a political party receiving its orders from abroad; in war time that situation had become unbearable."

The war, he said, has brought together all Frenchmen under one chief, Daladier, and one program—"the fight to the finish."

He justified Franch news censorship on the ground of war-time expendiency and said it "is not a permanent mask."

Of the vast French expenditures, he said, "Notwithstanding the enormous amount of purchases which we are obliged to make in neutral countries, particularly in the United States, the franc remains firm and we can pay cash for all orders."

Streit Defends World Union As Feasible

Political Scientists Retort His Plan Is Not Workable Now

tions, after a brief outline of the plan set forth in his book.

Streit said that the basic difference between the League of Nations and a federal union is that the first is an organization of states, while the second would be an organization of peoples. An international union, he predicted would grow into a world government with a constitution and congress, common defense, free trade, and other characteristics of the American union.

As a beginning, Streit suggested that the democratic nations unite at once and rule out the totalitarian countries, hoping to win them over by internal revolution.

Rules Out Dictators

"We must leave out at the start the dictatorships that have organized the people for the sake of the state," he said, "and also the immature democracies and begin with the smallest group of experienced democracies that will give us enough power to secure peace without war, by sheer overwhelming preponderance of power."

As founders Streit suggested the United States, Canada, Ireland, the United Kingdom, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Finland, Union of South Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

"This group has given the world what freedom it has," he said. "No two of these has fought a war between them in 100 years. United, they would own half the earth, rule all the oceans, govern nearly half of mankind and control more than 60 per cent of nearly every essential of peace and war.

"Their union is not proposed as a wartime bloc or closed corporation, but as a nucleus designed to grow peacefully and gradually into a universal world government by the admission into it of all other democracies now or to come that guarantee their citizens the basic individual rights for which the union would be made.

"This provision would give the people under dictatorship a tremendous stimulus to overthrow it and join the union."

H. Duncan Hall, formerly of the League of Nations secretariat, accused Streit of "tilting at windmills" and assuming "that men are rational and would do the rational thing."

He insisted that the League of Nations still offers "good enough machinery if there is a will to work."

Felix Morley, editor of The Washington Post, said he does not consider Streit's idea visonary but practical. He admitted, however, that it faces serious obstacles such as the trend toward Pan-Americanism and the attempt of this hemisphere to set up a neutrality zone.

"Where do democracies begin and end?" he asked, in suggesting that an international union on a regional basis might be preferable to the democratic alignment.

Morley expressed the opinion that the League of Nations is not dead despite its failures and pointed out that its decision to expel Russia had given it new life.

William Y. Elliott, of Harvard University, calling attention to the preponderance of Rhodes scholars in the panel, said "the ghost of Cecil Rhodes would be pleased at the idea of the United States coming to the aid of the British Empire after the war—or what's left of it."

The people of the United States must feel threatened from without before they "underwrite" Great Britain, Finland, or any other European democracy, he said.

Streit's plan, he added, ignores basic facts of humanity and nationalism. As an alternative he suggested that basic materials, essential to war, might be controlled internationally by agreement of a half dozen countries or less.

Compared to Colonial Period

A. R. Hatton, of Northwestern University, disagreed with Streit in his analogy of the efforts of the American colonies to organize in a union and later attempts at world unity.

He also contended that "political difficulties" of cooperation between the United States and European democracies are greater now than previously because of the failure of England and France to aid Spain and Czecho-Slovakia.

Benjamin Gerig, formerly of the League of Nations staff, said Streit's idea is "admirable in theory but as a practical plan goes too far too fast." He also insisted it is "too doctrinaire and too inflexible."

Quincy Wright, of the University of Chicago, pointed out that the organization of any political group tends to produce a counter group and said a union of democracies as proposed by Streit would have many vulnerable points from a defense standpoint. He cited Scandinavia and Belgium as examples.

Prof. Charles Grove Haines, president of the association, last night read a scholarly paper on "The Adaptation of Administrative Law and Procedure to Constitutional Theories and Principles."

At the luncheon meeting Thurman W. Arnold, Special Assistant Attorney General, spoke in an "off-the-record" fashion to a packed dining hall on State trade barriers.

The meetmg will close today with more round table sessions and a luncheon address by T. V. Smith, representative-at-large from Illinois.

Hunter Accused Of Trying Out New Rifle in Hotel

Joseph Grace, 60-year-old engineer, had a new .22-caliber rifle and was going hunting, but he stopped to see a friend yesterday, tried out the weapon and landed in the Third Precinct station—very unhappy.

Police arrested Grace in a fourth-floor room at the Fairfax Hotel, Twenty-first street and Massachusetts avenue northwest, after he had fired three shots through a wall into an adjoining room.

He was wrapping up the gun when the police entered. He said he wanted to show the weapon to Mrs. Mary Doyle and had shot at the wall, thinking it was masonry and that the bullets would do no damage.

The walls, however, were plaster board and the tenant in the next apartment called police when bullets came flying through, puncturing a picture.

Nobody was injured and Grace was charged with discharging firearms. He posted $25. He lives at the Adams Hotel, 1006 I street northwest.

War, in all its viciousness, monopolized the headlines during 1939 . . . war on land, in the air, on the sea, and beneath the waves . . . a war whose end is nowhere in sight. In Sunday's Post, Edward Folliard presents a complete review of the current conflict, from Germany's march into Poland to the suicide of the Graf Spee. Be sure to read it.

U. S. POLITICS

Climaxed by the calling of a special session in September, 1939 was a busy year for the representatives of the people. Neutrality, foreign trade, wages and hours, third-term speculation, Dies investigations, were only a few of the many things which kept the midnight oil burning on Capitol Hill. You'll find all of the important political issues of 1939 reviewed in Robert Albright's article in Sunday's Post.

SPORTS

The year just ending was a busy one for the sports fan. New champions were crowned, old ones repeated, records were broken, and so were hearts. There were few dull moments for the sports fan in 1939 and in an article in tomorrow's Post, Shirley Povich recalls some of the events that brought the crowd to its feet. No matter what your sports interest, you'll want to read this article.

WORLD EVENTS

Probably in no other year since the World War have political and diplomatic events affected the lives of the world's inhabitants as much as those which occurred during 1939. Russia, supposedly Germany's foe, became Germany's partner by the stroke of a pen . . . yet Italy, Germany's other partner, sent planes and men to help Finland in her war with Russia, to mention only two of the many confusing political moves of the year. There were more, many more, and in an article in Sunday's Post, Hedley Donovan tells you all about them.

DISTRICT AFFAIRS

1939 was a boom year for Washington. Home construction hit a new peak. Visitors to the Nation's Capital reached an all-time high. Parking meters and compulsory auto inspection made their debut. Federal employment increased to 129,000, another record. Yes, many records were broken in Washington in 1939 and in Sunday's Post Christine Sadler tells you all about them. It's an article that every Washingtonian will want to read.

ARMY & NAVY

1939 marked one of the most eventful peace-time years in the history of the Army and Navy. The armed services gained more men, weapons, and ships in 1939 than in any other peace-time year. John G. Norris has written a comprehensive review of the past year's activities of the Army and Navy which is of interest to all readers. Be sure to read it.

HUMOR

Despite the fact that wars were going on, crops were withering, rents were overdue, and the family car needed overhauling, the world still found time to laugh during the year just past. In a full page in tomorrow's Post, Alfred Friendly recalls some of the amusing incidents which made the headlines in 1939. They are just as funny now as when they happened.

PICTURE HIGHLIGHTS

Many exciting events occurred during 1939 and, as usual, there was a photographer on hand to record the scene. You'll find the best pictures of 1939 reproduced in the rotogravure section of Sunday's Post. There will also be a pictorial review of the war, from the time of the annexing of Czechoslovakia to the invasion of Finland by Russia.

Three Neutrals Agree to Favor Allies' Needs

Turkey, Yugoslavia And Spain to Raise Exports of Metals

By James B. Reston.
Copyright by New York Times.

London, Dec. 29.—The British government, it was learned today, virtually has concluded three important trade agreements with Turkey, Yugoslavia and Spain, assuring vital war materials for the Allies and seriously reducing Germany's supply of these commodities.

Turkey henceforth will sell its entire supply of chromium to the Allies. Yugoslavia will increase its exports of copper and other metals to Great Britain and France, and Spain, for the first time since the end of the civil war, will start shipping iron ore, mercury, lead and other metals to Paris and to London.

The Turkish agreement is already complete, but details of the Yugoslav and Spanish deals remain to be cleared up.

One important thing to note about these agreements is that they have been arranged, not by the British board of trade, but by the ministry of economic warfare. In no sense are they common trade agrements. They are war agreements with the two-way object of cornering supplies for the Allies so that those supplies will not be available for Germany.

In order to get Turkey's supply of chromium, the Allies agreed to take Turkey's entire surplus crop of figs and grapes, and in order to get Yugoslavia's copper, the Allies also agreed to buy up that country's entire export crop of prunes.

Armament supplies are costing Britain more than $10,000,000 a day, Minister of Supply Leslie Burgin announced. That figure does not include long-term contracts for raw materials, food, clothing, medical supplies and similar items.

"Since the outbreak of war we have put in hand 20 new government ordnance factories at a cost of £45,000,000 ($177,806,00). We extended the factories of contractors in some 300 cases," Burgin said.

"We have doubled our output of shells since the outbreak of the war and now are making ten times as many as during a comparable period in the last war. Since the beginning of the war gun production has increased in some cases by as much as eight times. Next year, gun for gun, our output will exceed the height of the final period of maximum production effort ever attained during the last war."

Army on Emergency Basis, Parliament Called for Wednesday

By International News Service

Dublin, Dec. 29.—Prime Minister De Valera, fighting the growing menace of an armed, terroristic Irish republican army, tonight summoned the Eire parliament into extraordinary session for Wednesday and ordered every arm of the Erie military into a state of emergency.

The parliament was expected to enact legislation enabling authorities to detain suspected terrorists without specific charges. Internment camps may be established, it was reported.

Eire's internal crisis reached a critical turn last Sunday following a raid on the Dublin arsenal. Truckloads of munitions and arms were taken.

An official announcement said a third of the ammunition already has been recovered by Erie troops, but increased precautions against a possible uprising were placed in effect.

Dublin was surrounded by troops armed with machine-guns and with planes for patrol work.

Authoritative sources revealed De Valera's cabinet was considering possibility of declaring martial law over the Dublin district, but this may not be asked by the Prime Minister.

Battleship Hit by Torpedo Limps Home, British Admit

By Raymond Daniell
Copyright by New York Times

London (Saturday), Dec. 30.—A German submarine torpedoed and damaged one of Britain's oldest battleships, a 30,600-ton vessel of the Queen Elizabeth type, west of Scotland, the admiralty admitted last night.

The admiralty announced at midnight that the battleship had limped into port under her own steam, with four members of the crew missing and one seriously wounded. The missing men were believed to have been killed when the U-boat launched its attack on the twenty-ninth British naval victim of the war at sea. Sixteen ships of the British navy have been sunk and 13 damaged, either by mines or submarines.

The aircraft carrier courageous was sent to the bottom by a submarine and the battleship Royal Oak was destroyed at anchor in Scapa Flow, but this was the first instance of a submarine attack on a battleship at sea since the war began.

What happened to the enemy submarine was not disclosed, but since the first news of the attack came from Germany, she apparently escaped to report.

The Germans did not say they had sunk the vessel, which they identified as a battleship of the Queen Elizabeth class. This class includes the Queen Elizabeth, the Warspite, the Barham, the Valiant, and the Malaya—all vessels of about 30,000 tons displacement, and carrying normal complements of 1,124 to 1,184 men. They were laid down before the World War and completed in 1915 or 1916, but have been reconstructed.

The brief admiralty announcement said:

"The British battleship which was hit by a U-boat torpedo Thursday afternoon now has reached harbor under her own steam. She is not seriously damaged. Four of the crew are reported missing and believed killed and one is seriously injured. The next of kin have been informed."

Neither the admiralty statement nor the German communique gave any details about the attack. The Germans declared the encounter took place off the west coast of Scotland.

An interesting thing about this attack, it was held in naval circles, was that the battleship, although hit by a torpedo did not sink as did the Royal Oak.

Loss of the Royal Oak aroused doubt regarding the effectiveness of bulges of armor against undersea attack.

In the last war all the larger warships were provided with torpedo nets of steel wire, rigged out around a vessel. They were discarded because they were too cumbersome in action.

Berlin, Dec. 29 (AP).—Germany's spokesmen declared tonight the Third Reich's underseas fleet had torpedoed a battleship of the Queen Elizabeth class.

German authorities, without contending the battleship was sunk, insisted it was damaged "severely."

In relating the attack on the battleship, Nazis recalled this type of vessel played a decisive role in the World War battle of Jutland, which bottled up the German fleet.

German military experts said these attacks indicated antisubmarine armament of British warships was ineffective.

In another phase of the war, it was disclosed Germany had sent a protest to Britain and France against use of mandated territories for war purposes. The protests also went to Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and nations represented on the League mandates committee.

and workers tonight were extricating victims from the demolished town, working in blinding snow and intense cold.

The trains reached Erzerum over Turkey's important new military railroad from Sivas, disclosing the line is still intact even though it lies across the heart of the stricken area.

The continuing cold—as low as 22 below zero Fahrenheit—seemed to be the greatest threat to the lives of the quake survivors. Reports indicated that thousands were huddled in the ruins of their homes or outside burning villages and towns with little or no protection.

Medical authorities continued frantic efforts to mobilize a precautionary relief against epidemics. Typhoid serum may be flown into the earthquake area by airplane.

Latest reports said food supplies were dwindling fast.

Ironically, many of the quake deaths were due to the populace piling stones and dirt on the roofs of houses to keep the insides warm. These piles crushed many victims when the quake struck.

Inonu Takes Charge

Istanbul, Turkey, Dec. 29 (U.P.)—Relief trains rolled into the devastated Turkish earthquake zone late today. Pres. Gen. Ismet Inonu arrived on the first train and took personal command.

Renewed shocks of minor intensity were reported earlier today in the vast area of some 2,000 square miles in which 92 cities, towns and villages were reported partly or wholly in ruins.

It was certain that an exact record of those killed would never be obtained. Fires were raging in many sections and bodies were being consumed before they could be removed from the debris.

Accompanying the President to Erzincan, a city of 60,000 population, were the Turkish ministers of health and interior and the chairman of the national relief committee.

Only three persons survived in the village of Tomruk out of 350 inhabitants, it was reported, and in the town of Zara, 1,000 houses were said to have been destroyed and more than 1,500 persons killed.

All casualty figures were accepted here, however, with extreme reserve pending an official check.

The government, as a sign of national mourning, canceled public and private celebration of the New Year holiday. People were urged to donate the money normally spent at such a time to the earthquake relief fund.

Presidential sympathy and relief money were sent to disaster-ridden Turkey yesterday by the United States.

President Roosevelt cabled Turkish President Ismet Inohu: "I am deeply distressed to learn of the devastating earthquake in Anatonia and on behalf of the Government and people of the United States I wish to extend my deepest sympathies."

A few hours later Chairman Norman H. Davis of the American Red Cross said the organization had cabled $10,000 to the Turkish Red Crescent for relief of earthquake victims. The funds were dispatched by the State Department to United States Ambassador John Van MacMurray.

Seeds Leaving Moscow

Moscow, Dec. 29 (AP).—Sir William Seeds, British Ambassador to Soviet Russia, will leave for London next Tuesday for a visit described by the British Embassy as an often-postponed leave. The British Embassy pointed out the Ambassador had been ill frequently in the last year.

the isthmus, between 8 p. m. December 26 and noon of December 27 and that 300 Russian casualties were left on the field after fighting on the Sysky Lake sector December 27.

Finnish soldiers seized rifles, automatic weapons and ammunition in both actions.

"In the Kuhmo sector," the communique said, "our troops captured a tank, and an anti-tank gun destroyed a column of 40 packhorses.

"North of Suomussalmi a battle around Lake Kianta continued all day. Our troops destroyed an enemy supply column and one armored car and captured three tanks and two guns."

The Red air force again lashed out across southwestern Finland, bombing several railway junctions and sea coast towns during the brief daylight hours, but it still was not clear tonight whether there had been any serious damage.

In the icy gloom of the Petsamo area, in Arctic Finland, nothing new has been reported since the Russians were observed trying to entrench themselves and end a precipitate retreat.

Peace Offer Reported

London, Dec. 29 (U.P.)—The Finnish Legation said tonight that the Moscow radio station, in a broadcast during the day had proposed an immediate armistice whereby all of the Karelian Isthmus would be restored to Finland.

The legation said the offer was broadcast from Moscow, over the wave-length of the Finnish radio station at Lahti, 60 miles north of Helsinki, while the Lahti station was quiet because of a Russian air raid this morning.

A Russian listener in London reported, however, that the Lahti wave length was jammed throughout the day and that he heard no such broadcast. He doubted that such a broadcast had been made as that reported by the Finnish quarters.

Desertions Reported

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Dec. 29.—Many cases of desertion from Soviet units stationed in eastern Poland have been reported from the Polish-Hungarian frontier.

Soviet authorities have prohibited the sale of civilian dress to Russian officers in the fear that these will be used to facilitate flight across the Carpathian Mountains into Rumania and Hungary, or across the Polish demarcation line to the German-occupied areas.

This mass desertion is one of the reasons for dispatching to Finland troops used in recent operations in Poland.

British Fly for Finns

London, Dec. 29 (INS).—British aviators are piloting many of the Italian Savoia bombing planes carrying out attacks on Russian troops and supply centers in Soviet territory behind the Finnish frontier, the London Evening Standard reported today in a Moscow dispatch.

It was understood, meanwhile, that about 40 British warplanes had reached Finland to aid in resisting the Soviet invasion, but it was said that no Royal Air Force men had gone or would go to Finland.

The vanguard of an American ambulance corps, being organized for aid to the Finns, arrived at Malmoe, Sweden, today. It consisted of two ambulances with a personnel of four young American medical workers. They were detached from the American Voluntary Ambulance Corps of Paris, which is aiding the French with 20 ambulances on the Western Front.

The Swedish army is unofficially contributing considerable bodies of men to the Finnish defense forces.

Nazi Envoy Off for Berlin

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Dec. 29.—German Ambassador Von Mackensen, who left Rome last night for Berlin, is understood to be going to report to Fuehrer Hitler on what must seem to Germany like the alarming extension of good relations between Italy and the Vatican, it was learned today.

It is generally considered in informed circles that the Pope is making a determined effort to separate Italy from Germany, and it is fairly clear that the recent trend of Italian policy is back toward lines pursued 10 years ago when Premier Mussolini negotiated the Lateran accord.

Incidentally, it was said today that the date of January 4 given yesterday for Mussolini's visit to the Pope was incorrect. The visit is going to take place but it now seems more likely to come between the fifth and ninth of January, although it may even be later than that.

Daladier Aims At United Europe

the United Press, estimated that the European nations are spending close to $150,000,000 a day above normal budgetary expenditures. The expenditures were estimated at: Great Britain, $33,600,000; France, $22,400,000; Germany, $44,800,000; Russia, $22,400,000; Finland and the small neutrals, $30,000,000.—Editor's note.]

Speaking of sentiment in the army, Daladier said:

"They are fighting to put an end to a regime of force which has weighed over Europe during these past years—to put an end to a policy of rapine and prey."

He detailed how these first credits were to be spent on airplanes, on tanks, and the construction of three 35,000-ton battleships.

The French navy, he mentioned, had sunk nine submarines and captured 360,000 tons of merchandise. "We must," he said, "push mechanical construction to the extreme, for in modern war the machine is master."

Men to man the machines were coming from all over both the British and French empires between which, he said, there was complete union. That union had been shown at Geneva when they took common action against the aggressor of heroic Finland. It was confirmed in the help they were giving in common to the Finnish people in application of the League of Nations decision.

Adventists Protest Assigning of U. S. Envoy to Vatican

Elder J. L. McElhany, president, Seventh Day Adventist World Conference, notified President Roosevelt that the Adventists look with great apprehension on the sending of Myron C. Taylor to the Vatican to work for peace.

The elder, accompanied by C. S. Longacre, a member of the general conference staff and secretary of the Religious Liberty Bureau, went to the White House at 2 p. m. and left the letter.

The letter complained that the sending of Taylor to Rome tends to break down the American principle of separation of church and State, McElhany stated.

He emphasized, however, that the Adventists cherish peace and will support any moves in that direction. They could see, however, no reason for sending an emissary to one religious organization, he said. Elder McElhany resides at 309 Greenwood avenue, Takoma Park.

to Buenos Aires with more than 1,000 men from the raider, including Capt. Hans Langsdorff.

Why the quartet remained with the Tacoma has not been made clear.

It was understood the decree would hold that the Tacoma picked up the Graf Spee's crew at command of Capt. Langsdorff and thus actually behaved as an auxiliary warship.

The reported ultimatum to the Tacoma would repeat the Graf Spee incident on a smaller scale.

Rather than accept internment for the Graf Spee or take her out to an inevitable sea battle with waiting Allied ships, Capt. Langsdorff blew up his vessel on the order of Adolf Hitler when the 72-hour deadline set by Uruguay expired.

Baldomir's decision today was said to have been taken after a study of the effects of the Argentine government's reply to Germany's protest against internment of the Graf Spee crew by Argentina.

The Buenos Aires government held the Graf Spee men were belligerent seamen and not shipwrecked sailors as Berlin claimed.

3 Nazi Ships May Sail

By Arnaldo Cortesi.

Mexico City, Dec. 29.—Early sailing of at least three of the seven German vessels still in refuge in Mexican ports is forecast in reports from Tampico and Manzanillo. The ships are the liner Orinoco and the freighter Phrygia, both at Tampico, and the freighter Havelland, at Manzanillo. None yet has asked for clearance papers.

The captain of the Havelland, however, arrived in Mexico City today, apparently to receive instructions from the German legation.

British Cruiser Damaged

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 29.—Arrival of the British cruiser Shropshire yesterday for repairs revived a rumor current last week that the Shropshire had captured the German steamer Bahia Blanca.

The Bahia Blanca sailed two weeks ago fully loaded for Germany. She was next reported captured between Natal, Brazil and Dakar, Africa, though the report could not be confirmed.

Today, the British embassy declined to give any information except that, if the Bahia Blanca had been captured, it was not by the Shropshire.

A Career Appointment

The appointment of Daniel W. Bell to succeed John W. Hanes as Undersecretary of the Treasury seems eminently suitable. Whether Mr. Bell remains for a long or short time in his new position, he has already made it clear that he desires to continue in the Government service. Indeed, rather than relinquish his civil service status, he declined to accept the position of budget director, after serving as active head of the Budget Bureau for several years.

Mr. Bell comes to his new duties as an experienced civil servant who has no outside business interests to distract him, and who does not feel under compulsion to "make a record" of achievement within a limited period. Some of his predecessors in this particular office have undoubtedly been handicapped by lack of familiarity with the routine of government and by an expectation that their connection would not be lasting.

In the selection of Mr. Bell for the very important office of Undersecretary of the Treasury President Roosevelt has again turned to a career man, who, by hard work and demonstrated ability, has steadily advanced from a minor position to increasingly responsible posts.

His work has already brought him into close contact with both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury. And that is another reason for concluding that this selection is wise. However well equipped a man may be to fill a difficult position, his usefulness depends quite as much—sometimes more—upon his ability to work amicably and effectively with his immediate superiors.

A Tough Break

Commissioner of Immigration Houghteling has revoked an earlier order permitting the Bata Shoe Co. to bring 100 Czecho-Slovakian workers into the United States to be employed as instructors in the company's first American plant. Two weeks notice is given, after which only 10 of the 100 authorized instructors, 72 of whom are already in this country, may be employed here.

It is unfortunate that the revocation of the original order, which entailed a waiver of the alien contract law, should have followed violent protests from the United Shoe Workers of America—a C. I. O. affiliate. The sequence of events inevitably gives rise to suspicion that Commissioner Houghteling changed his mind under duress.

The Immigration Service is certainly to blame for permitting alien workers to enter, under a contract for employment, without a thorough testing in advance of the employer's assertion that his processes and machinery differed so greatly from American methods as to require special instruction. Somewhat belatedly, investigators for the Government have reached the conclusion that there are "very few processes employed at the Bata plant which are not known to skilled American workers and which might justify the importation of Czecho-Slovakian workers."

If the company has been guilty of misrepresentation, as Mr. Houghteling strongly intimates, revocation of the order of admission is, of course, justified. Be that as it may, the incident should serve as a warning to the Government against hasty action in the future on similar applications. Some thought should be given to the plight of the unfortunate Czechs who have suddenly been deprived of jobs for which the Department of Labor earlier stood sponsor. The expense, the personal disappointments, the individual hardships entailed by revocation of the order admitting them to the United States, are matters for which this department has a clear moral responsibility.

If, as asserted, the skilled Czech workers are really needed to train American labor in new methods, their exclusion from the plant of the Bata company near Baltimore may have very unfortunate consequences for native workers. If the statements of C. I. O. spokesmen are believed, on the other hand, then the company's policies constitute a threat to American wage and labor standards which make its new plant a very doubtful blessing.

One would like to continue to think of the United States as a haven to which men and women, driven from their native lands by political or economic disaster, could come freely, founding new homes and finding opportunities for new work. But the days when this country welcomed the distressed, regarding them as assets rather than liabilities, are behind us.

Today, with millions of unemployed, the demand is for exclusionist policies that rigidly bar the entry of destitute aliens and strictly limit the numbers admitted for exceptional reasons. The Bata Shoe Co. episode provides a typical illustration of the spirit of economic separation which now is everywhere in evidence, impeding the free movement of labor as well as that of capital and of goods.

"America Must Choose"

Congressional investigation of the reciprocal trade agreements policy, preliminary to a vote upon extension of the empowering act, will be welcomed by friends as well as foes of the present program. Secretary Hull has already indicated that he is pleased at the prospect of a searching examination, "provided it is undertaken in an earnest desire to secure information."

Proponents of the trade agreements program, however, will do well to be sparing of intimations that the tariff act of 1930 was primarily responsible for a world-wide depression, the onset of which had already been heralded by widespread signs of distress, including our own 1929 stock market collapse. Post-hoc, propter hoc attacks on the "Hawley-Smoot embargo policy" are as narrowly partisan in tone as Senator McNary's recent assertion that the trade pacts have seriously injured domestic producers. The forthcoming debate over the reciprocal trade program will do more harm than good if it is characterized by sweeping charges and counter-charges of this sort.

The underlying issue which Congress will be called upon to decide in this matter is whether the United States shall use its influence to remove obstacles to international trade, or shall follow a road leading toward economic autarchy.

In 1934 Secretary Wallace wrote an extremely able pamphlet entitled "America Must Choose," in which he pointed out that this country must take one of three paths: Self-containment (autarchy), full participation in world trade, or a planned middle course. Mr. Wallace then offered a fair and objective analysis of the causes of the collapse of our foreign trade.

As he said, we entered the World War a debtor nation and came out with the rest of the world heavily indebted to us. Meantime, our farms and factories had greatly increased their output. The problem of disposing of our post-war surpluses to debtor countries was met for some years by lending huge sums abroad and creating a false market for exports. The collapse of 1929 and the subsequent depression was the inevitable impact of reality upon a policy which sought to retain the advantages of a debtor nation without assuming any of the obligations of a creditor. The tariff increases which occurred in 1922, and particularly in 1930, of course emphasized this yearning for Cloud Cuckoo Land.

With the elimination of foreign loans, the simple fact that trade is trade could no longer be evaded. It is on that plain and obvious truth that the case for the reciprocal trade treaties rests. In other words, our policies must make it possible for customers to pay for what they buy from us. They cannot do so if tariff barriers exclude their products. Furthermore, if domestic prices are raised to artificially high levels, they will not purchase our goods.

These inescapable facts are as true today as they were when Secretary Wallace so freely admitted their cogency nearly six years ago. Yet the agricultural emergency which was then cited as justifying a temporary shift toward a nationalist, self-contained agriculture is still in full swing. The Department of Agriculture is still striving to raise the price of farm products ever higher, although our major export crops are already so high-priced that they can only be moved abroad with the aid of Government subsidies.

It is significant that the just-announced suspension of the wheat and flour export subsidy program is due to improvement in domestic wheat prices and the prospect of a short wheat crop next year. In other words, further exports are not considered necessary, or the export subsidy would have been continued.

The agricultural program inevitably carries in its wake higher protective duties on goods entering the country in competition with domestic farm products. And by its very nature it tends to cut us off from foreign markets which were once open. Thus the Administration by its farm program checkmates efforts to reopen the channels of international trade through the medium of reciprocal trade agreements.

This internal conflict of aims has been ignored year after year, largely on the assumption that there is no fundamental difference of objective—only a temporary working at cross-purposes. However, the time has come to face the issue. A choice has to be made between farm policies that cut us off from the rest of the world and trade policies designed to reduce artificial barriers to international exchange of goods.

Congress, in other words, must decide not so much for or against an Administration policy, but between two mutually contradictory and irreconcilable policies which the Administration is simultaneously pursuing. Intelligent inquiry, which is the duty of Congress, is bound to make this conflict clear.

Logical Next Step

Extension of the Hatch act to cover employes of State highway departments, and other State agencies utilizing Federal funds, is a logical next move in the campaign to eliminate politics from the public service.

Of course the arguments in favor of eliminating politics from State agencies partly financed by the Federal Government apply with equal force to independent States agencies. But there is no way in which the Federal Government can force the States to improve the quality of public service except by setting a good example for them to follow. In case of State agencies utilizing Federal funds, however, the Federal authorities can attach conditions to grants and loans, and withhold assistance in case of noncompliance.

Senator Hatch, therefore, proposes to bring pressure to bear upon Federally-aided State agencies by withdrawing such aid if responsible State officials fail to dismiss employes guilty of violating the law which bears his name. This is a roundabout method of reform, designed to meet constitutional obstacles to direct Federal penalization of State employes. In case of the District of Columbia, as Congress knows, no such constitutional difficulties arise. The Congress has full power to legislate for this local government, and to impose direct penalties for failure to eliminate politics from District services.

Senator Hatch regards the latest proposed amendment to the act as "just one more step—but a long step—toward the ultimate objective of bringing all Federal workers under the merit system and making continuance in office dependent wholly upon merit.

With politicians forbidden to use Federal office as a vantage ground from which to carry on partisan activities, and with the rank and file of Federal employes protected against political exploitation, the major obstacles to further extension and strengthening of the merit system have certainly been removed. For the chief advantage of the patronage system lies in the opportunity afforded politicians to build up party machines, with the aid of their appointees.

As the principle embodied in the Hatch act is extended to embrace new groups of public employes, the States will find it increasingly difficult to resist pressure to eliminate politics and to cast out spoilsmen from the governmental services under their exclusive control.

Philosophic Pitfalls

There is a venerable joke concerning a countryman who, when confronted by a giraffe, exclaimed, "Ye don't fool me, there ain't no such animal." Given the choice of believing his senses or maintaining his faith in a rational order, he chose the side of reason.

Mr. James C. Petrillo, head of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, seems to adhere to the same school of philosophy. To Mr. Petrillo an admission of the reality of Mr. John L. Lewis is, ipso facto, a denial of a rational universe. Or, possibly, Mr. Petrillo is one of those who would contend that, although Mr. Lewis may conceivably exist, it is necessary for the sake of social convenience to proceed on the assumption that such a phenomenon is unreal.

Anyhow, Mr. Petrillo has given warning that if any actor in any theatrical show in Chicago dares so much as whisper the name of John L. Lewis, the production will be stopped in its tracks by a walkout of musicians and stage hands. Accordingly, it is said, there has been hasty expurgation of the script of three current shows. Reports do not indicate whether, by way of further caution, Mr. Petrillo has instructed his A. F. of L. musicians to play as overtures the well-known melody, "Oh, Breathe Not His Name."

On the other hand, success has not attended the effort of Mr. Michael Sullivan, of Cambridge, Mass., to force the residents of that community (including Harvard) to forget that such entities as Lenin, or even Leningrad, ever had existence. Remarking that "Mike's heart is in the right place," but implying that his head had perhaps been mislaid somewhere, Mayor Lyons of Cambridge vetoed Mr. Sullivan's resolution, passed by the town council. This would have forbidden printing the words "Lenin" or "Leningrad" in any map, book or newspaper originating in or imported into Cambridge.

In a way it seems unfortunate that such an interesting experiment should be so decisively cut short. It would be valuable to know whether unpleasant realities can be simply snubbed out of existence. "There is nothing," observed Hamlet, "either good or bad, but thinking on it makes it so." And some argue that the reverse is true, that you can make a thing not so simply by ceasing to think of it.

Mr. Roosevelt, for instance, has already gone some distance in applying Mr. Sullivan's principle to the national deficit. Perhaps, in his forthcoming message to Congress, he will go further. Perhaps he will argue, quite logically, that there is really no deficit whatsoever because a deficit, by definition, implies a state of nonexistence.

"As Handsome Does"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was surprised to read in my paper this morning of American criticism of England for not aiding Finland in her hour of need. I have always respected the American Nation for her sense of justice and proportion. This respect has been amplified by her speedy condemnation of Russia for that country's unprovoked and inhuman invasion.

This criticism has considerably dampened my respect for America. Britain is engaged at war with Germany and the busiest service at present—and one to which it is my privilege to belong—is the Royal Navy which alone could render effective assistance to the Finns. Aren't the Americans taught to practice what they preach or do they always sit down in easy-chairs and tell others, who may be snowed under with work, exactly what to do and how to do it?

If Americans feel justified in their criticism, think how much more so we feel entitled to pour back similar outbursts. We have each mutually and indignantly protested the many recent invasions. But now Britain has acted and, allowing for national pride, I can justly reiterate "Handsome is as handsome does"—not professes, not says, but does.

K. E. RICHARDS.

In A China Shop

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: That was a charming bit of writing about Confederate "currency," humdrum commodities and the redolent scent of lavender. There was artistically woven through its fabric a cunning little comparison of the value of old Richmond money, as recorded in a current news dispatch, and new Washington money; seemingly to the disparagement of F. D. R.'s wampum as compared to Jeff Davis'.

A more philosophical essay (albeit, still highly literary) in the very next column, points out that the vital need in our modern society is to translate what we know into what we do.

Entirely free of any fee, I exhibit this timely testimony from your financial page: United States Government issues running from a low of 102.24 up to 114.27, with mostly pluses in the day's changes; and without benefit of the President's "charmingly evasive language."

Until we "do" as much as we "know" in our social economy a lotta money must be corraled—at no per cent!—and spent.

"It Might Have Been"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir:

"Of all the words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these, 'It might have been.'"

Our refusal to enter the League of Nations and take an active part in strengthening the machinery for international cooperation and collaboration for the maintenance of peace and justice throughout the world, was, with the exception of the World War itself, the greatest and most costly political mistake made by any great Nation thus far during the twentieth century. As a result, the dominant powers among the victors showed very little mercy and justice toward a defeated people.

Now another war is being fought in the great struggle for supremacy among the powerful nations of Europe. England and France are very little concerned about the political and territorial existence of the small nations except insofar as they can help them in their determination to prevent Germany from becoming a strong nation. England sent the Runciman Mission to Czecho-Slovakia to help prepare the destruction of that republic. She and France gave Poland a guarantee which they knew could not be fulfilled—a guarantee to maintain an unjust and unnatural situation.

They tried to incite war between Germany and Russia in order to strengthen and consolidate their position in western Europe. They refused to enter an international conference for the purpose of rectifying some of the mistakes and injustices of the Versailles Treaty, the continued existence of which they knew would eventually lead to war.

The method provided by the Covenant of the League of Nations for this purpose was never employed. They are now fighting a war to perpetuate an international order of society based upon national hatred, greed, and injustice toward a people that has been denied proper access to the abundant resources of the world. England, for centuries, has endeavored by any means whatsoever, to destroy any European nation that might become strong enough to challenge her position as a great power.

I am not defending the cruel and brutal policies of Germany and Russia toward minorities within the boundaries of their respective countries or their ruthless aggression against small nations, but if this is the purpose of England and France in the present struggle, if it is their policy to deny justice and fair consideration to the German people, as well as the Russian, if it is their plan to try to prevent Germany from having access to the resources of the world and a fair opportunity for the enjoyment of the common products and benefits of civilization, then here is one American who hopes that Germany and the forces on her side will defeat England and wreck the British and French empires—the two greatest land robbers and welchers in the world. Perhaps the disintegration of these empires into their component parts would be for the common good of world civilization.

In your editorials and special articles you have severely condemned Germany, Russia, Italy and Japan, but you have failed, I think, to consider the basic and fundamental reasons responsible for the development of this condition of "international chaos" which confronts humanity. Are the other great powers entirely guiltless?

PAUL A. HILL.
Arlington, Va., Dec. 24.

Who Is "The Great Emancipator?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "E. V. H." in The Post of December 27 asks, "Will some of the above mentioned writers please explain why Mr. Lincoln is not justly entitled to be called the Great Emancipator?"

No single American is entitled to such a classification, for the reason that it is too difficult to say which one among the many contributed the most effective blows against the institution of slavery.

A chain of historical events starting in the Constitutional Convention of 1787, and continuing until the enactment of the thirteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution after the close of the Civil War, makes it impossible for the most analytical mind to determine which link in that mighty chain is the most important or the strongest.

George Mason, of Virginia, urged upon the delegates to that convention to provide appropriate constitutional measures to abolish slavery. He refused to sign the completed draft of the Constitution because his request went unheeded, and predicted that "within 75 years the North and South" would be locked in a death grapple over the slavery question. Exactly 74 years later Fort Sumter was fired upon.

The influence of George Mason upon the liberals in that assembly found a repercussion in the organization of an antislavery society, immediately after the conclusion of the work of the delegates in which such names as John Jay, Alexander Hamilton and Benjamin Franklin appear.

These were golden links in the chain of events leading toward the final ending of slavery.

Thomas Jefferson forged another when he wrote the prohibition against the introduction of slavery into the North-West territory into the ordinance for the government of that great area. But for this inhibition, there could not possibly have been a Dred Scott case, which drove the liberals of the country into white heat, and undoubtedly was the principal contributing cause of the Civil War.

Additional links in the chain of events leading to the final extinction of slavery came with the heated debates which culminated in the Missouri Compromise, and in the great events which occurred in the decade immediately preceding the Civil War, such as the fugitive slave bill of 1850, the Kansas-Nebraska act, the Dred Scott decision and John Brown's raid at Harpers Ferry.

In the midst of this tumult came Abraham Lincoln to Congress, where finding that the fugitive slave bill did not apply to the District of Columbia, he sponsored the measure which made it so apply. He went out of his way to strengthen a measure, which made of every white man in the North a potential slave catcher, or amendable under severe penalties to the authorities if a run-away slave was found sleeping in his barn, or if he gave one a crust of bread.

As President of the United States many hundreds of slaves escaping to the North were turned back by the armies under his command.

Mr. Lincoln refused to put into operation the "confiscation acts" passed by Congress to enable him to emancipate the slaves wherever the Union armies held sway, and William Henry Smith in his "Political History of Slavery" writes: "It was the consensus of opinion among members of Congress, that Mr. Lincoln sought to obtain full credit for emancipation, when he got ready to act." This attitude undoubtedly explains the severe Presidential rebuke to Gen. John C. Fremont, who in Missouri had issued a proclamation of emancipation for the slaves in that region.

When the Presidential proclamation was finally issued on the score of "military necessity," it was found that it emancipated no one from anything. It did, however, exert a widespread moral influence on the Nation, but even in this Mr. Lincoln was not leading the procession, but was considerably behind the great parade.

And when one considers the labors of the antislavery society and studies its origin and growth—its relentlessly consistent denunciation of slavery, and note the historic figures of Garrison, Phillips, Stowe, Mott, Greeley and Douglass, one begins to understand that if any single American is entitled to be called "The Great Emancipator," he or she must be found in the ranks of these moral giants who made millions of converts to their cause.

Burned Bridges

It is one of those rather typical Washington menages made up of a group of bachelors. There's an easy air about the whole place with a hang-over of good fellowship probably left from fraternity house days. Those who live there come and go without explanation, in sweaters and slacks, in white ties and black, on week-ends in New York and week-ends in Virginia. Still there's nearly always someone there with or without dates, listening to the broadcast of a football game on Saturday afternoon or before a wood fire in the long old drawing room after dinner in the evening.

They sat before the fire and "bulled," reminiscing a little—because they've been out of college awhile. The subject was the advisability of "chucking the works" now and then (before marriage, an inevitable condition sooner or later to be faced, interferes) for any kind of uncertainty that would lead to any new port. At one time or another most of them have done this, and one of the group was telling about his stay in Brazil when another caller dropped in.

He took a chair under a lamp and George saw that his hair was thinning a little. He ran his hand over it, lighted a cigarette and fell in with the others. Brazil, with its vari-gauge railways, its coffee plantations near Sao Paulo, the harbor of Rio with its cloudless winter sky from April to October, fell away.

The latest caller remembered the two years he had worked in New York, barely making a go of some kind of economics advisory work. He had worked hard, he said, and had built up libraries and files that were worth a lot in their line. Then one evening about 6 o'clock he said he knew he was through. He cleaned off his desk and locked its drawers and the next morning went out to the exit of the Holland tunnel to thumb a ride.

Under his reversible raincoat he carried a few clothes and in his pocket all the money he owned. You can travel farther, he said, without luggage. A man who was driving to Philadelphia to sell a used car gave him a lift. In a drug store in Philadelphia he telephoned a lad he had known in college and was asked to dinner.

Dinner lengthened into a party where he met some people from Richmond who were driving south in a day or two. Why didn't he go along? Well, since the "business connection" he had expected to see hadn't turned up, he believed he would. Somewhere on the road he remembered he had been born in Washington and had friends and connections here. He got out of the car on Pennsylvania avenue and in three weeks had a job in the Government.

For $20 a transfer company went to New York, cleaned out his rooms and brought everything he owned down here. There was no way of measuring, he said, the good it had done him. And remembering this he also remembered some shots of California, where once he had been in school, that he had seen in the movies last night.

Someone mentioned Paris, and the last caller remembered another time he had been in New York. This time preceded the other and was in the lush days of ten years ago when he was just out of college and was selling bonds. One night he picked up the Times and before reaching the financial page spotted a small ad soliciting applicants for a cruise manager of a college tour to Europe. The address was Broadway and 110th street. Well, he had to eat dinner so he might as well try the neighborhood of 110th.

It was a second-floor office and as he went up people came down with long faces. The attendant at the desk told him the job was filled. Who said he came for the job? He wanted to inquire about their rates. He was shown into Mr. Goldstein's office and he told Mr. Goldstein he had come for the job.

Mr. Goldstein said it was filled and picked up his ringing telephone. In a minute he put it down and said the man he had chosen couldn't get a passport in time. Could this applicant have a passport in his possession by tomorrow night? A long distance call to Washington did the trick, and he got it.

In Genoa he left the tour after having lost the greater part of his money at poker on the way over. In Genoa he met a young man from Harvard without funds. The two went to Paris on what the one had, set themselves up in a small pension near the Cafe du Dome on the Boulevard Montparnasse and proceeded to enjoy life. Several months later the one rejoined the tour (of girls from Vassar and Smith and Randolph-Macon) in England and came home to America. He never went back to his old brokerage house.

"You've got to do it once in a while," he said. "If you don't you'll find yourself in that inevitable rut. The trouble is that practically everyone dreads the rut but not enough do anything to avoid it. It isn't hard. All you do is look your 9-to-5 routine square in the face, say to thunder with it and walk out. The trouble is, people think it's hard when it isn't at all.

"Naturally there are a thousand things to hold you back. The lease on your apartment. Those engraved white cards Washingtonians stick in their dresser mirrors. Just don't sign a lease, and remember there'll be plenty of people at the party.

"Well, I can't tell you the good it does you. You get things to remember you can't get in any other way. Like the lights you were telling about around Rio harbor. I remember lying in a canoe on a Canadian lake and looking up at the stars. I remember driving a Hispano Suiza 100 miles an hour along a beach in California . . ."

George stood up.

"Don't go," somebody said.

"Got to. Got to get to bed so I can get up and make the office tomorrow at 8:30 sharp."

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

IT WAS NO sudden sense of power which emboldened Jimmy Petrillo, the president of the Chicago Federation of Musicians, to censor three theatrical shows so as to eliminate mention of John L. Lewis, of the C. I. O. Jimmy admits that he is a dictator, but insists that he is a good dictator and refuses to speculate as to what evil might be done were he to die abruptly and his powers to be taken over by some person less conscientious and wise. However, he abhors Mr. Lewis as one who would become a bad dictator of the whole American labor movement.

I discuss Mr. Petrillo on the basis of personal acquaintance and inquiry. He is respected in Chicago, where the labor movement is preyed upon by criminals of the lowest kind, of whom Willie Bioff, the boss of the mechanical side of the movies and the stage of the entire United States, is a typical specimen. Jimmy gets $25,000 a year and works full time for his union, even in his political role as member of the park board.

Union Horned In On Panda Welcome

HE IS SO ALERT to turn up a dollar in pay for the treasury of his union that a resident of Chicago, sitting down to play a few bars on the piano in his own home, has a feeling that he is likely to receive a bill next day for a full night's wages of Jimmy's musicians. A man who puts a record on the phonograph in the privacy of his home may well feel that if someone reports him to Jimmy, the Musicians' Union will be after him for the price of a whole orchestra, payable into the union treasury, subject to Jimmy's order.

Not so long ago the Chicago Daily News imported from China a little animal called a giant panda. The newspaper arranged a bit of ceremony to solemnize its arrival, and someone thought it would be appropriate that a detachment of Chinese Boy Scouts turn out and blow a few bugle notes at the railroad station. The Chinese Boy Scouts were on the job ready to bugle the panda welcome to their city when a representative of Jimmy's union phoned the paper to say if so few as one of them blew a single bleat the paper would get a bill for a day's wages for eight musicians, payable to the treasury of the Chicago Federation of Musicians. The spokesman for the Daily News said the paper had nothing to do with the presence of the Chinese Boy Scouts, but the union agent said that, nevertheless, if any of them horned a note the paper would have to pay.

ABOUT THIS TIME the panda came in and the Chinese Boy Scouts blared their welcome, so the financial tribute automatically became due, but I believe that was one case in which Jimmy's union missed a tackle. Be that as it may, the demand was typical of Jimmy's attitude. He is a strong advocate of the stand-by system whereby union men must be paid for doing work if there is work to be done, or for the time it would take them to do over work which has already been done by other union men elsewhere. His union, in collaboration with the stagehands, has practically abolished "the road" by extravagant demands for the nonperformance of strictly imaginary work and driven the actors out of the American theater and into underworld dives operated by criminals.

'Cultural Director' Of City Of Chicago

JIMMY IS PROUD of his success in getting $80,000 a year of the taxpayers' money for public concerts. He holds that these concerts have raised the cultural level of Chicago, and thus have been worth the money, but he was less considerate one day a few weeks ago when Mr. Matt Taylor, of the Elevator Operators and Starters Union, appeared before the park board to demand $24,000 a year in stand-by pay for the men who theoretically would have been employed in the buildings of the park board if the board had not installed escalators and self-service elevators. The principle was the same, but Jimmy denounced Mr. Taylor and his demand was turned down.

Jimmy hates John L. Lewis, and, being a dictator and cultural director of Chicago, it is within his province to censor out of any play or movie placed on public exhibition there any matter which is personally, politically or otherwise offensive to him. He would see nothing wrong in that, and after all these years of punishment, Chicago is so groggy that it will not occur to the people of the second American city to object. They can take anything. But no wonder. Look at the practice they have had.

Retirement Act For Postmasters In Effect Jan. 1

More than 33,000 postmasters throughout the country will come under the operation of the Federal retirement act on New Year's Day, the Civil Service Commission announced yesterday.

Of the total, 29,000 are fourth-class postmasters, in classified status. The others are Presidentially appointed postmasters of first, second and third class offices who have qualified for civil service status under terms of the O'Mahoney act.

Beginning Monday, any incumbent Presidential postmaster who has, or may thereafter, acquire classified status will be subject to the act. The retirement age for postmasters is 70, provided the incumbent has served at least 15 years.

When all Presidential postmasters have qualified for classified status, the number subject to the retirement law will be about 44,000, the commission estimated.

Slithering Into Unnecessary Trouble

IF EVER THERE was an example of the left hand not knowing what the right hand is doing, it is this Declaration of Panama.

After a prolonged debate Congress enacted a neutrality law based on the principle that the way to avoid entanglement in the war is to sever all connection with and all responsibility for shipping that serves the belligerents. Thus far the law that Congress enacted has completely achieved its purpose. Although there has been a fierce war at sea, no American ship has become involved in the war since the law went into effect. No American ship has been sunk. No American lives have been lost. Nothing has happened that has caused even a diplomatic collision with any of the belligerents. If the object of the law was to keep the United States from becoming involved in the war as a result of incidents like those which preceded the American intervention of 1917, then the neutrality act of 1939 may be regarded as very nearly fool-proof in actual practice.

Yet in the Declaration of Panama we have, in the name of a so-called zone of security, "abandoned the successful principle of the neutrality law, and committed ourselves to a totally different principle, to one without warrant in international law, to one that the American republics do not have the power to enforce, to one which threatens to embroil and entangle the United States with both belligerents.

Artificial Creation Of Trouble Zone

UNDER THE Declaration of Panama the American republics undertake to patrol and police against all the great navies of Europe a zone of water 300 miles wide extending from Canada to the end of South America. Instead of adhering to the practical principle of cash and carry neutrality, the Declaration of Panama requires us to send our warships and airplanes over thousands of miles of open ocean, looking for trouble and committed to the task of trying to regulate in minute detail the activity of three great European navies.

The statement of protest made last Saturday by the 21 American republics shows on its face that far from creating a zone of security we are well on the way toward creating, unnecessarily and artificially, a zone of trouble and entanglement. The American republics announce that they will prevent "belligerent vessels from supplying themselves and repairing damages in American ports when the said vessels have committed warlike acts within the zone of security." This means that if a German, British or French war vessel comes into any American port to take on food or fuel or, repair damages, the government of that American republic—Uruguay, for example, or the Argentine—must decide whether that particular ship, which may have been at sea for three months, has or has not committed a warlike act somewhere between Newfoundland and Cape Horn.

That is utterly and absolutely impossible. For how on earth is Uruguay going to know and prove what a ship like the Admiral Graf Spee was doing in the 100 days that the ship was at sea? The British and French navies could not find the Admiral Graf Spee for three months. Does the navy of Uruguay know where she was? When Capt. Langsdorff came into Montevideo he announced that he had sunk 50,000 tons of shipping. If he had not announced it how would Uruguay have learned that he was sinking ships, and where he was sinking them? Are Uruguay and the other American governments going to put the captains of war vessels through the third degree to extract a confession every time they put into an American port, and how are they going to verify the confessions?

Graf Spee Details Still Unknown Here

THIS PROTEST arises out of the naval battle which ended off the harbor of Montevideo. By accident South American observers saw part of that naval action. But even of that action, which was spectacular and close to the shore, the American governments do not yet know all the facts, and some of them, the very facts which are most significant, they may never know.

For example, according to Mr. John W. White's dispatch to the New York Times, official opinion in Uruguay believes that the Admiral Graf Spee had run short of fuel and ammunition, having been at sea for a hundred days. Official opinion in Uruguay believes that the German cargo steamer Tacoma was about to sail from Montevideo with 1,600 tons of fuel oil for the Admiral Graf Spee. Official opinion in Uruguay believes that another German steamer, the Ussukuma, which was scuttled when it met the British cruiser, Achilles off the Argentine coast, had a cargo of ammunition for the Admiral Graf Spee. Official opinion in Uruguay believes that the French liner Formose was carrying ammunition for the Argentine navy from Rio in Brazil to Montevideo, that the Formose was being escorted by the Exeter when she was attacked by the Admiral Graf Spee, and that the battle started when Capt. Langsdorff fired a shot at the Exeter.

Obligated To Use Our Naval Power

OFFICIAL OPINION in Uruguay may be right. It may be wrong. Who knows? There were no Uruguayan observers aboard the Admiral Graf Spee, the Exeter, the Tacoma, the Ussukuma and the Formose. Yet the policy announced on Saturday requires that the government of Uruguay shall punish somebody for something or other which no Uruguayan has defined and no Uruguayan can prove.

Moreover, there is not a ship in the whole of South America, let alone Uruguay, and there may not be an American ship in the whole Atlantic Ocean, capable of dealing with a vessel as powerful as the Admiral Graf Spee. When another great German warship, or a great British warship puts into Montevideo, is the United States Government going to undertake to back up Uruguay's unprovable official guesses as to what that warship may have done somewhere in the zone?

Is the United States going to use threats of force against the great powers of Europe because officials in Uruguay have guessed that a warlike act was committed on the high seas? Are we going to engage our naval power to back up South American official opinion as to what ships like the Tacoma, the Ussukuma and the Formose were doing? We cannot inspect those ships. We cannot regulate their voyages. Why then should we entangle ourselves in the obligation to regulate their activities on the high seas?

A Troublemaker, Not Preventative

THERE IS NO POINT in it. As long as American ships are not attacked inside the zone or outside it, what real difference does it make to the American republics where the European navies fight their battles? Nobody in Uruguay or the Argentine was hurt by the naval battle. No one's legal rights were violated, and it is a sound principle not to complain when you have not been hurt.

The fact of the matter is that the Declaration of Panama was a mistake. It is illegal. It is unenforceable. It manufactures trouble instead of preventing it. It is unnecessary. Nothing but pride of opinion, a wholly false pride where great peoples are concerned, will cause us to adhere to it, pushing ourselves into artificial complications from which it may soon be very difficult to extricate ourselves gracefully.

Father Haas Urges Capital, Labor, Farm Unity

Philadelphia, Dec. 29 (U.P.).—The Right Rev. Francis J. Haas of Catholic University, recommended to the Allied Social Science Association that the Federal Government should summon immediately a conference of "recognized leaders of industry, labor and agriculture" to consider a program of employment and to provide adequately for work relief.

Father Haas, dean of school of social science and a special conciliator for the United States Labor Department, proposed an extension of collective bargaining and mediation in labor ranks.

Asserts Dispatch of Scouting Fleet to Hawaii Is Inauguration of American War Plan; Adds No One Dares Deny Fight May Occur

By Wilfrid Fleisher.

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Tokio, Dec. 29.—"The United States has assumed the role of watchdog in East Asia in the place of Great Britain and France, and the problem i nthe Pacific therefore is the vital question of Japan versus America," says Rear Admiral Gumpei Sekine, ex-spokesman of the Japanese navy department, in a pamphlet entitled "The Open Door Under the New Order," published today by the Toa Kensetsu KKyokai Society for building up East Asia.

"I have long foreseen the possibility of the China war entangling us with America," Sekine writes. "Just as a mist concealing the true outline of a high peak has cleared off, so we are now all of a sudden brought face to face with the issue.

Hawaii Fleet Move Cited

"The comercial phase in the Pacific is of no slight importance to us, but afr more important is the fact that the United States possesses the real strength to oppose Japan in the Pacific Ocean. The strength of America is her naval strength, and therefore the problem is essentially a naval problem between the two countris. We do not say that war is inevitable in the Pacific, but no one dares to say that a war will never occur."

According to Sekine, America's abrogation of the commercial treaty with Japan was meant principally to show America's disapproval of the outcome of the Anglo-Japanese negotiations over the Tientsin situation.

"America," he writes, "is now raining attacks on Japan and approaching her again for the damage done to America's rights and interests in China. She has lodged more than 600 protests with Japan. Furthermore, it is reported that the American Government has dispatched 8 heavy cruisers, 30 destroyers and 1 aircraft carrier to Hawaii.

Calls It War Move

"If this is true, then there must be another detached fleet of nearly equal strength, for Rear Admiral Joseph K. Taussig, former assistant Chief of Naval Operations of the United States, declared that the American Navy should have two scouting fleets of equal strength—one in Hawaii and the other at Panama—while the main fleet should be kept in the neighborhood of Los Angeles. But America is telling only of the dispatch of a fleet to Hawaii, and says nothing of the eet dispatched to Panama."

[In the fleet movement to Hawaii referred to by Sekine, the aircraft carrier Enterprise, 7 light and heavy cruisers, 18 destroyers, 4 destroyer tenders and 9 minesweepers left San Diego on October 6 to form a "security force" with its base at Pearl Harbor, the Hawaiian naval base.]

"All this can be interpreted only as a resolute threat to Japan," Sekine continues. "Broadly speaking, it may be regarded as the inauguration of the American war plan against Japan, although we do not like to believe such an evil omen."

Sekine says Japanese policy must be directed toward industrialization of China.

River Opening Scouted

Copyright, 1939, by New York Tribune, Inc.

Shanghai, Dec. 29.—In a canvass of American business men in Shanghai, it was learned today most of them were of the opinion Japanese announcement of reopening of the Yangtse River to commercial traffic was without meaning as long as the present military restrictions prevailed.

It was pointed out that in recent months the Yangtse had been open to third power shipping as far as Kiangying (former Chinese Boom Town, between Shanghai and Nanking), but no business had developed because of the military restrictions.

The consensus of these business men may be summarized to the effect that the United States should not grant concessions in a new trade agreement until Japan guarantees reopening of the Yangtse as far as Hankow, with a definite date announced on which military restrictions will cease.

Pendergast Tax Case Is Reported Settled for Half

By the Associated Press

Thomas J. Pendergast, former Kansas City political boss now serving a prison term for Federal income tax evasion, was reported yesterday to have settled for about $350,000 all civil tax claims of the Treasury.

The tax claims were the ones he was accused of avoiding when sent to Leavenworth. After his conviction the Treasury still asked him to pay up. The settlement was said to have wiped off approximately $707,000 of claims.

The Treasury would make no official statement.

Paradox Of Recovery

By Mark Sullivan

Wrong Medicine But Patient Gains

THE UNITED STATES, as the New Year begins, is enjoying business recovery. We are enjoying it at a time when Government is following, and for 7 years has been following, practices which, as a whole, are not favorable to business recovery. Government continues in the same hands, and continues many of the same practices. Yet we have business improvement.

This paradox calls for explanation. But no comment this column could make would be as well expressed—or as perfectly apt to the day—as the following passage, written by a man named Adam Smith. It is in a book called "An Inquiry into the Nature and Causes of the Wealth of Nations." The book, as it happens, was published in 1776, the same year that the United States became a Nation. And the economic principles laid down by Adam Smith in his book had as much to do with America's well-being as the political principles set forth the same year in the Declaration of Independence by Thomas Jefferson. Smith said:

"The uniform, constant and uninterrupted effort of every man to better his conditions, the principle from which public and national as well as private opulence is originally derived, is frequently powerful enough to maintain the natural progress of things toward improvement, in spite both of the extravagance of government, and of the greatest errors of administration. Like the unknown principle of animal life, it frequently restores health and vigor to the constitution in spite not only of the disease, but of the absurd prescriptions of the doctor."

Noninterference Basis Of Economy

GRASP THAT, reader, and you will have a sufficient text for this New Year period. You might commit it to memory, for in addition to being sound economics, it is also good literature, fine prose.

You need read this column no further, unless you have abundant holiday leisure. I append another quotation, which is good, though not quite, I think, so completely sound as the passage from Adam Smith. The following is from an American philosopher, Ralph Waldo Emerson:

"The basis of political economy is noninterference. The only safe rule is found in the self-adjusting meter of demand and supply. Do not legislate. Meddle, and you snap the sinews with sumptuary laws. Secure life and property, and you need not give alms. Open the doors of opportunity to talent and virtue, and they will do themselves justice, and property will not be in bad hands. In a free and just commonwealth, property rushes from the idle and [foolish] to the industrious, brave and persevering. The level of the sea is not more surely kept than is the equilibrium of value in society, by the demand and supply . . ."

'Wallace's Father Against Price Control

THERE IS ANOTHER quotation peculiarly apt to the time. The author was, like Adam Smith, of Scotch blood. His name was Wallace. Indeed his name was Henry Wallace. But he was not the Henry A. Wallace whom everybody knows as Secretary of Agriculture. The Wallace who wrote the following was Henry C. As it happens, Henry C. was the father of Henry A. By a coincidence—which is not paralleled in our history, I think—the two Wallaces were both Secretaries of Agriculture—the father in Harding's Administration, the son in Mr. Roosevelt's. Father and son, in private life, were both editors of the same farm paper, Wallace's Farmer, of Des Moines, Iowa. And an Iowa researcher has dug up and sent to this column the following passage, which appeared in Wallace's Farmer 19 years ago, November 5, 1920:

"If it cannot be stopped in any other way, Congress should enact a law imposing very severe penalties upon any Government official who undertakes to influence either crop production or crop prices . . . There are too many people in public office who seem to think they ought to exercise some sort of guidance or guardianship over the farmer."

'Beware The Evil Of Leveling Down'

WALLACE, THE FATHER, wrote something more, which has been resurrected by the same researcher, from the Yearbook of the United States Department of Agriculture for 1921, when the senior Wallace was Secretary. That was a year of minor depression, and Wallace, the father, wrote:

"As is always the case in such periods, many well-meaning men come forward with ill-considered measures. Visionary schemes of all kinds are presented. Some would have the Government take charge of the larger business enterprises. Others would have the Government undertake to fix prices, either arbitrarily or indirectly by buying up surplus crops. The experience of 3,000 years shows the impracticability of such efforts."

There is room for another quotation appropriate to this time and season. This is from Roosevelt, but not from Franklin D.—he would hardly feel at home in this little New Year's thesaurus of timely quotations, and one would not wish to embarrass him by including him. The following is from another Roosevelt and another President, Theodore Roosevelt, from a speech he delivered at the Sarbonne, Paris, April 25, 1910:

"The reward must go to the man who does his work well; for any other course is to create a new kind of privilege, the privilege of folly and weakness, and special privilege is injustice whatever form it takes . . . Let us try to level up, but let us beware of the evil of leveling down."

Navy and Congress Also Studying 60,000-to-80,000-Ton Battleships, Vinson Says, in Expansion Program

By the Associated Press

Chairman Vinson (Democrat), Georgia, of the House Naval Committee, hinted yesterday that the proposed $1,300,000,000 naval expansion program might be altered to give the fleet a new type of warship—possibly an answer to Germany's pocket battleships.

The Georgian indicated that inasmuch as the 10,000-ton limit on cruisers expired with the Washington Naval Treaty, this country could construct a new type of ship between the cruiser and battleship classes.

Heavy cruisers now in service are considerably faster than pocket battleships, but they are inferior in gun caliber and armor. With larger ships, however, those deficiencies could be remedied.

Vinson said that at hearings next month on the expansion program, there would be full consideration of all such questions, including whether the United States should construct the 65,000 or even 80,000-ton battleships being talked of in Congressional and naval circles.

Roosevelt View Uncertain

Informed sources said that some Navy Department proponents of the 65,000 ton ships believed that at least four of the huge craft, estimated to cost between $130,000,000 and $160,000,000, should be started within the next few years. Whether President Roosevelt was in accord, however, remained undetermined. Advocating caution in deciding such questions, Vinson commented:

"The practice is for Congress to authorize gross tonnages for the Navy and to let the experts decide the number and types of ships."

The proposed expansion program which Vinson said he would introduce the day Congress convenes, calls for a 25 per cent or 400,000-ton increase in the size of the fleet and, as originally outlined, would provide three new aircraft carriers, eight cruisers, 52 destroyers and 32 submarines in addition to 31 auxiliary ships and 2,395 airplanes.

Board, President Confer

President Roosevelt conferred, manwhile, with officials of the Anglo-French purchasing board in this country on the progress of their acquisition of American supplies.

Arthur B. Purvis, president of the agency, revealing the general nature of the discussion, intimated important developments might stem from it by saying that the board's New York office possibly would make some announcement later.

Purvis and Rene Pleven, assistant to the president of the Franco-British Committee of Coordination in London, attended the meeting in company with Secretary Morgenthau and Capt. Harry E. Collins, of the Treasury Procurement Division.

Col. Per Zilliacus, Finland's military attache, said yesterday his government had made an urgent new appeal for American-made warplanes.

"It's far easier said than done to get them without delay, however," he commented after conferences with War Department officials.

Forty-four Brewster fighters released last week by the Navy before they had been completed appeared to be the only planes available immediately. They are expected to be shipped next month.

Aside from planes, the Finns apparently have made little headway toward obtaining in this country antiaircraft guns and other modern weapons. A contract for 60,000 military gas masks is still pending, Col. Zilliacus said.

Thousands Here to Pray For New Year

'Watch Night' Rites With Music, Sermons Will Usher in 1940

Thousands of Washington churchgoers will kneel tomorrow night to usher in the new year with prayer, meditation and spiritual resolutions.

The fact that New Year's Eve falls on Sunday has given local churches an opportunity to arrange "watch-night" services with music, sermons and other features. Many social programs will precede worship rites.

An interfaith watch-night service will be held on the steps of the Capitol Building tomorrow from 11:30 to 11:59 o'clock. Catholics, Protestants and Jews will participate.

Arranged by the Committee on Religious Life in the Nation's Capital, the service will have as principal speakers Dr. John K. Cartwright, rector of the Church of the Immaculate Conception; Dr. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, and Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, of the Washington Hebrew Congregation. Music will be offered by choristers under Mrs. Ruby Smith Stahl's direction. She conducts the First Congregational a cappella choir. The services will be heard over the N. B. C. blue network.

Bloomingdale Watch Night

Churches of the Bloomingdale section of the city will hold their annual watch-night services at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow at the Rhode Island Avenue Methodist Church, with Dr. Joseph M. M. Gray, chancellor of American University, delivering the main address. Dr. E. A. Sexsmith will be host pastor.

Foundry Methodist Church will be the center of special watch-night rites, opening with meditation and music at 8:15 o'clock. Young people of the congregation will conduct an informal service from 9 to 10 p. m. in the dramatic hall, with films being shown. The Woman's Guild will sponsor a social program from 10 to 10:45 p. m., and the closing hour will be spent in the sanctuary.

Assisting Dr. Frederick Brown Harris in the climaxing service will be Dr. Chesteen Smith, discussing "The Methodist Advance," and Dr. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House, and Dr. Eddy L. Ford, religious education director at Foundry. Dr. Harris will preach at 11 a. m. on "A Golden Key for the New Year."

Hour of Recreation

At Ninth Street Christian Church, Ninth and D streets northeast, the New Year's Eve program will begin immediately after the regular evening service. An hour of recreation is set to start at 9:15 p. m. in the adult department. A program of skits, music and stunts will be held at 10:15 p. m., and the worship phase will begin at 11:30 p. m. The Rev Clifford Jope, pastor, will lead devotions. Refreshments will be served later, and New Year's greetings will be brought from the Women's Council.

Mr. Jope will preach at 7:45 p. m. on "Has It Been Worth While?" The men's chorus will sing under Joseph O. Harrison's direction.

Following the annual Southern Baptist "student night" observance the Takoma Park Baptist congregation will have three students as speakers at its evening service. The Rev. William E. La Rue will preach at 11 a. m. on "The Year Is Dying."

The watch-night program at Petworth Methodist Church will begin at 9 o'clock with a New Year's pageant and candlelight service. # New Building Is Planned By Hyattsville Presbyterian

The present building of the Hyattsville Presbyterian Church at Wine and Johnson avenues

Historic Congregation, Now in 236th Year And Among Seven Oldest of Denomination In This Country, Has Already Bought Lot

By Robert Tate Allan.

Historic Hyattsville Presbyterian Church, which recently celebrated its 235th anniversary, will erect a new church and Sunday school building in the near future, The Washington Post learned yesterday.

PASTOR

Among the seven oldest bodies of its denomination in the United States, the Hyattsville congregation already has purchased a site for the proposed project, according to the Rev. D. Hobart Evans, pastor since 1926.

To rise on the southwest corner of Arundel and Wine avenues, opposite the Hyattsville High School, the new structure will contain ample facilities to house the growing membership, Mr. Evans indicated. While building plans are still in the discussion stage, a 15-member building council has been selected, with George J. Burkhardt as chairman.

Three thousand four hundred square feet in size, the lot was recently bought for $6,600, and is expected to be fully paid for before building operations begin. The present church, erected in 1916, stands at Wine and Johnson avenues, about a mile south of the new site.

The new location, which follows the current northward building trend in the community, will be the fourth church site in the colorful history of the Hyattsville Presbyterian Church, whose first edifice once stood in Upper Marlboro, Md.

First Site From Beall

The land for that structure was donated to the church trustees in 1704 by Col. Ninian Beall, prominent landowner of the period. The deed of that famous transaction has been copied and is now on exhibition in Upper Marlooro. Nathaniel Taylor was first pastor.

During the same year, Beall aided in obtaining a silver communion service which now reposes in the vault of an Upper Marlboro bank. It has been displayed on several occasions, and is said to have been a gift of Queen Anne.

From 1717 until 1874, the congregation worshiped in Bladensburg, then moved to Maryland boulevard, where services were held until erection of the present edifice in 1916. The congregation holds the distinction of having been represented in the first Presbytery session in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1706; in the first Synodical meeting several years later, and in the first General Assembly in Philadelphia in 1788.

Thriving, Energetic Group

The suburban congregation today is a thriving and energetic group, from whom the pastor can depend on getting splendid support.

Mr. and Mrs. Evans' background of youth leadership training, and their prominence in that work throughout the Presbyterian denomination, is reflected in the stimulating youth programs of the congregation. There are three Christian Endeavor units, with the following leaders:

Mrs. M. M. Harring and Mrs. A. E. Morrow, advisers, and Edward Conrad, president, of the juniors; Mrs. John Speicher and Mrs. V. S. Ward, advisers, and Jane Jackson, president, of intermediates, and Mr. and Mrs. Evans, advisers, and Gerard Prentice, president, young people's. The young men's Bible class is taught by T. Earle Bourne, University Park mayor.

Throughout their lives, since they were fellow-scholars in a church in Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Mr. and Mrs. Evans have been active in youth religious work.

Mr. Evans, a popular speaker at the annual Presbyterian young people's summer conferences at Hood College, has addressed many District youth rallies, and is chairman of national missions for the Washington City Presbytery. He is now being considered as national director of summer conferences of Presbyterian youth. More than 115 conclaves are held yearly, drawing some 15,000 youths. He also has been instructor in local religious teachers' training schools, and served for seven years as teacher of New Testament in the Howard University School of Religion.

Mrs. Evans is secretary of young people's work of the Washington City Presbyterial, and youth officer of the Presbyterian Women's Synodical Society.

Other Leaders and Groups

Among other organizations and leaders of the Hyattsville Presbyterian Church are:

Warren W. Cole, clerk of the session; Dr. Carl M. Conrad, Sunday school superintendent; Mrs. Dolphin Weber, cradle roll department supervisor; Mrs. H. M. Harshaw, beginners' department head; Mrs. C. O. Wherley, primary unit leader; Mrs. C. M. Conrad, junior department head, and Mrs. J. L. Clark and Mrs. Oscar Remson, leaders of the home department.

H. L. Wilkins is teacher and G. J. Burkhardt is president, of the men's Bible class. M. M. Harring and Mrs. C. J. Stauber are teacher and president of the women's Bible class.

Happy New Year And Thank You For Friendship

The value of religious news has taken on added significance to readers of The Post in 1939. Hundreds of new friends have been made, and old ones retained, and better understanding created between the press and the church.

This success in no small measure can be attributed to the splendid support of Washington pastors, Bible and Sunday school class teachers and officers, church publicity workers and scores of others.

Your cooperation in keeping us well informed of your congregational activities and your aid in various ways of facilitating coverage of church news has been indeed heartening, as well as helpful. We thank you for it, and hope for continuation in the new year.

With sincerest wishes for a happy and prosperous New Year.

"O LITTLE TOWN OF BETHLEHEM"
*Rev. Phillip Brooks

"O little town of Bethlehem
How still we see thee lie!
Above thy deep and dreamless sleep
The silent stars go by;
Yet in thy dark streets shineth
The everlasting Light;
The hopes and fears of all the years
Are meet in thee tonight."

*This hymn was composed by the Rev. Dr. Phillips Brooks just before Christmas in 1868. It was written on the theme of Christ's birth and His birthplace and was reminiscent of a visit he had made two Christmases before to the little town of Bethlehem, where he had worshiped in the old church near the very spot where Jesus was born.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Mainbocher Is Now Trying to Do Over The Feminine Figure

New York, Dec. 29.

THE OTHER day I bandied a few words with Mainbocher, the Iowa boy who made good in Paris as a front-rank clothes designer for ladies. When Europe began to go boom, he came back here to introduce to free - spending American women the elegance of the Parisian high couture, or, as I should put it, very classy dressing.

Alice Hughes

He's no stranger here, for this was a stopover on his way to France. He worked for a famous fashion magazine. Then came the Paris career, and his name in electric lights in the style racket. At the moment Mainbocher is in the news as the father of the wasp-waisted corset, which startled the fashion-conscious ladies some months back. Of course, he really just revived it, but memories in such matters as style are very short indeed. I asked him about this corset business in the course of the party where we met.

The hitherto unprinted news about that corset is the fact that he called it "waltz waist"—the implication being a tiny midriff that a man likes to encircle in that highly "immoral" dance in three-quarters time. But either the term was bargled in cabling, or else the French pronunciation of waltz sounded suspiciously like wasp. At any rate, that was the term by which these things came to be known. In all truth, I don't suppose he cares very much—for under any name the revival got acres of space and colossal conversation.

The thing has caught on to the extent that next spring a noted American corset firm will bring out a line of wasp waists, differing from the original only in the fact that Mainbocher is trying to re-do the female torso by making it longer-waisted, running it practically down to the hips. In short, the new figure is a long, slender column instead of a billow here and there. What to do, girls?

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Well, our American Airline stewardess school, located at our town's magnificent new airport, LaGuardia Field, has graduated its first class, and 23 very pretty girls, all registered nurses, were handed their theoretical sheepskins. The graduating class, after six weeks of training, represented 11 States, with only one, Helen Van Thun, being a local girl. The kids went right to work—11 of them being based in Chicago and seven here. The others are scattered about the East and Midwest . . .

Society, whatever that is, made a terrific to-do over the "Gone With the Wind" openings here. Mrs. John Hay Whitney, who is Liz to her chums, turned up with Doris Duke Cromwell, and Mr. Whitney, whose money is in Producer Selznick's company, attended with another party. And the whole howdy-do was televised, if you please. Oh, yes, Brenda Ducky Darling Frazier, with a new coat of Bahama tan, was on deck with a fellow named Edward Sheedy. What, no Peter Arno? The Frazier child goes down to Nassau every now and then to get away from the cameraman. How the poor dear is pestered! Or has she grown to love it?

JOHN GARFIELD, the movie actor, is coming back to Broadway to appear in a new show called "Heavenly Express." This short, very earnest kid was discovered by Cliff Odets, estranged spouse of Luise Rainer and himself the leading left wing playwright. Garfield was working in the basement of a Fourteenth street store. How could Odets know that the boy was potential star material? These matters always puzzle me to death. They don't make any sense . . .

"A Woman's New York," by Alice Hughes, also appears in The Post on Sunday, in the Society and Woman's Sections.

One New Year's Resolution

Resolved not to appear at any social function looking tired and bedraggled, the woman above takes time out for a facial cocktail. After cleansing the skin thoroughly, she applies a herbal cocktail masque to relieve fatigue lines and to stir up circulation. This regime is applicable to any woman who would put her best face forward in 1940

Daily Beauty Regime Should Be Included in 1940 Plans

Inventory of Appearance Should Be Taken At End of Year and Resolutions Made For Increasing Poise and Self-Assurance

By Carolyn Abbott.

BEAUTY is never static. It either increases or decreases with age. Look long and carefully into a mirror for your personal answer. If the last 12 months have left you lovelier and more youthful looking than the year before, then your chief concern is to continue in the same direction. However, if passing time has piled up more debits than credits against your appearance, a few resolutions are in order.

Extravagant, elaborate promises to grow more beautiful with the years are unnecessary and seldom kept. The best way to preserve and to obtain the perfection of face and form that you desire most is to establish a simple, daily beauty regime that meets your individuals needs and time requirements. Decide on a course of action that is practical and beneficial—one that will net visible results in the coming years. Whatever regime you choose, adhere to it faithfully and do not perform any of the ritual haphazardly or irregularly. There are no short cuts to beauty. To be obtained or preserved, it must be worked for diligently.

What to Do in 1940

So, if you would face 1941 with poise and assurance resolve to:

Keep serene and happy.

Brush your hair 100 strokes nightly.

Exercise regularly. Build up a 15-minute exercise regime to eliminate your figure defects.

Cleanse your face thoroughly at least twice a day. If the pores are cluttered with dirt and grime, use a pore wash or pore grains.

Stay out in the fresh air as much as possible.

Experiment to determine the most becoming shades of make-up and apply it adeptly in a strong light—in the sunlight whenever possible.

The Hair Is Important

Adopt the most flattering coiffure and arrange your hair in that manner regardless of changing styles.

Develop inner beauty and resourcefulness as well as outward loveliness.

Avoid nervous tension as much as possible. Cultivate the habit of relaxing mentally and physically.

Eat properly and get the equivalent of 8 hours' sleep daily.

Manicure the fingernails at least once a week.

Banish all hatreds and petty annoyances. These mar the expression of the face and spoil an otherwise lovely countenance.

Correct all posture faults and walk as youthfully and gracefully as possible.

Increase the zest for living. This enthusiasm will reflect in your face and increase the come-hither look that draws friends.

Redecorated Bed Will Do Wonders In Cheering Home

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

THERE'S more than one way to make good use of an old bed. On a drive through the country recently we saw the two ends of an old iron bed swung on hinges and used as a farmyard gate. Twasn't the most stylish effect we've ever seen, but we must admit it was pretty practical.

A better-looking use of an old bed was made by a gay budgeteer who had one of those tall old wooden beds on her hands. She ripped off the footboard, then painted the headboard pale blue and decorated it with peasant designs in bright colors. She bought pale blue dotted swiss and draped the sides of the headboard like side canopies, then made a ruffled bedspread to match.

This bed, in a room with walls painted light blue and floor painted bright cherry red, looked very jaunty. White fuzzy chenille throw rugs (which could go into the washer) and white lamp shades on bases painted red were crisp accents. The curtains were blue swiss, of course, and some old wicker chairs, painted light blue, got cushions of bright peasant patterned cotton (from which the motifs painted on the bed were taken). A dressing table was improvised with blue swiss skirt and a painted top with the peasant motifs repeated on it. A chest of drawers got a coat of light blue paint with more of the peasant motifs on the drawer fronts.

For the walls family photographs were framed attractively and hung in a group together. These frames were red ones from the five and ten with wall paper mats in a light blue plaid paper.

Rejuvenating a room this way won't cost a pretty penny—figure on buying paint, yardage of swiss and printed cotton, lamp shades, picture frames and rugs. Then also count in hours of your own labor, for this isn't a glib job to be done in a slap dash.

'Descend to Save. No Soul, Alone, Is Shriven!' Platonic Wife Is Told, in Poet's Words

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Knowing the futility of logical deduction as a means of inducing a change of attitude when a fixed idea exists, I am still writing to you in the hope that "Perplexed Husband" and his befuddled wife may yet find happiness. Since she, by her own premises, was "begotten in sin," her chances of becoming "an angel in Heaven" are exactly nil, even if these premises are to be accepted.

She is trying desperately to "save" her soul by evading the "biological aspects" of married life, unknowing that by the terms of her solemn and voluntary contract with God and man, she has pledged herself to serve her husband and her unborn children. The fact that one must lose himself in service to others, in order to be "saved," was pointed out by that very Jesus of Nazareth whom she is ignorantly trying to follow.

Unless there is some physical reason why marital union in this case is impossible or inadvisable, it is incredible that a just and beneficent God would impose upon her the duty of resisting those biological urges which He Himself has implanted for the perpetuation of mankind. It seems to me that if these two would cooperate in working out, patiently and sympathetically, their problem of physical adjustment, greater happiness would eventuate than if they tamely dissolved a relationship where mental, and possibly spiritual affinity already exists.

I would close by quoting from the splendid poem, "The Way," written by Luella D. Smith:

I climbed through weary ways
life's highest hill,
To see, beyond my world, the
A wail arose from earthly woe
and ill—
"Descend to save. No soul, alone, is shriven!"

And may I remark that a "Heaven" in which one would be the only "angel" would be pretty close to Hell for most people. Very truly yours, ARISTIDES.

Is beauty or brains a woman's greater social asset? See Mary Haworth's column in The Post tomorrow.

She, Too, Thought It Saintly to Be Sexless

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have never before written a letter to a column such as yours. But after reading about the problem of "Perplexed Husband," I decided to give my opinions. I am so sorry for both of them, especially for the girl. Her husband will forget and go on, but some day she will have to come down to earth and face facts, and when that day comes, it will be painful for her. I know.

As a result of training very similar to hers, I lost my own husband. I, too, felt that it was saintly to be sexless; that one must control one's feelings; that it was my religious duty to keep my husband, as well as myself, from being emotional . . . We came to hate each other . . . He met someone else at a crucial time. They fell in love, and we parted. That was three years ago. I have not married again.

I only wish that all couples who have misunderstandings would realize their ignorance and consult some outsider like yourself, a wise minister, or a good doctor; or read some books that would give them the knowledge they need. Divorce is seldom, if ever, the best solution. When a husband and wife feel that they cannot stand each other a minute longer, they should go apart for a little while to regain their perspective, and learn wherein they personally have failed, and thereafter come together again with an inconquerable determination to solve their mutual problem harmoniously.

Why are we led to believe that happy marriages are made in Heaven? Why aren't we taught that we build them for ourselves, through tireless cooperative effort? That in order to receive and to hold love, we must give love? That it is infinitely easier (from the woman's viewpoint) to adjust yourself to the idiosyncrasies of one dear, familiar husband than to be "all things" to a miscellaneous assortment of men friends?

This highly touted "freedom of action" isn't much fun. It becomes a burden and a bondage after a time. If your husband wants to smoke, why not let him, if it gives him any pleasure? The same goes for moderate drinking. When you are looking for the worst and prophesying it, it always happens. I was a prude at one time. I didn't smoke. I didn't drink. I liked my house "just so." I prized good manners, correct deportment, beautiful clothes, a well ordered home, etc. I wanted perfection. Today I have nothing. Will I ever?

I would like to marry again, but I wonder, even now, if I would have the courage to work out a pattern of married life with my husband that was free of concessions to what others might think—my mother, my Aunt Tillie, the neighbors next door, etc. I hope I have learned, at long last, that bigness of heart is more pleasing in the sight of God than sanctimonious self-concern . . .

And may I thank you for your fine advice. I have gotten a great deal from your column and I know that this is true of others. There must be great satisfaction in knowing that you have eased great pain and given light to many through dark hours of discouragement and confusion. May you and yours enjoy 1940, and may the New Year bring you everything you want. Sincerely,

PHILOSOPHER.

Milk, Favorite Drink of Youth

America's youth drinks milk. This beverage is by far the favorite drink of all three meals, according to the Second Annual Survey on Youth conducted by the magazine Young America.

At least 78 per cent of the students of junior high school age had milk or cocoa at lunch, 73 per cent milk or cocoa at breakfast, and almost 70 per cent had one or the other for dinner.

Gay Ballads Aid Parties

FOR FUN—more and better fun—what can beat a good old "sing"? Every chick an' chile loves these hillbilly ditties, haunting spirituals, tender mountain love songs. And when you've got songbooks everyone joins in.

Warbling "Climbing up the Golden Stairs," you just let yourself go:

"Then hear them bells a-ringing,
'Tis sweet I do declare,
Oh, hear them darkies singing,
Climbing up de golden stairs."

No doubt about it, a love song always makes you happy—so sing "Snowflakes." It's a honey—sure 'nough.

"Come give me a kiss, for tonight we must part.
Sunshine will follow the rain,
So keep me ever in your sweet precious heart
Till the snowflakes fall again."

Does trouble come creepin' around? Drive it away with a hillbilly favorite, "Sing Hallelujah." It goes:

"If you've built a barn and paint it brown,
And lightnin' comes and burns it down,
Sing Hallelujah.
Sing Hallelujah!"

Do you like 'em funny? Then "Blue Tail Fly" is right up your alley.

Send 15 cents in coins for our songbook, "22 Favorite Hillbilly Songs," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of book.

Kills Germs in Blood Stream; Can Be Taken By Mouth; Has Been Used Successfully In Scarlet Fever and Other Diseases

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

As in former years, the greatest amount of research and the greatest amount of progress in the whole field of medicine in 1939 has been in infectious diseases, and the most hopeful work has been done this year in the treatment of pneumonia. This is due to the application of the drug, sulfapyridine.

Sulfapyridine is a dye. For many years it has been known that dyes of various kinds are selective in their action in that they will kill germs in the blood stream without injuring the blood or the tissues. This is the basis of the "magic bullet" of Ehrlich—salvorsan, which has an affinity for the spirochaeta of syphilis but does not harm the tissues of the body and, therefore, by its administration we are able to get rid of the germ and leave the body intact. It is a kind of chemical surgery. Dyes which have been used along the same lines include mercurochrome and gentian violet. None of them, however, has the advantages of sulfapyridine.

In the first place, sulfapyridine can be given by mouth, whereas mercurochrome has to be given by vein. It kills an enormous range of germs. It has been used successfully in pneumonia, meningitis, scarlet fever, mumps, kidney infection, bacterial endocarditis, iritis, congenital blindness, and, indeed, is being applied to practically any general infection.

I have not seen any report of its application to localized infections such as carbuncles or boils, or osteomyelitis, but I suggest this as a possible development.

With the use of sulfapyridine, the fall of temperature to normal within 24 to 36 hours occurs in a large proportion of pneumonia cases. A fall in temperature is accompanied by improvement in the patient's general condition, and after that the consolidation in the lung clears up gradually.

It has some disagreeable by-effects because it produces nausea and vomiting in about two-thirds of the cases, and occasionally a skin eruption, but these are not serious. All powerful drugs have some disagreeable by-effects.

The Nobel prize goes to Prof. Gerhard Dogmagk for his invention and discovery of sulfapyridine. He was born in Lagow, Germany, in 1895. He was professor of pathology at the University of Greifswald, after which he associated himself with the Institute of Experimental Pathology of the I. G. Dye Works in Elberfeld.

'Four Howes' Honor Old Decatur House

Program of Madrigals and Music for Ancient Instruments Played for Distinguished Guests at Home Now Occupied by Mrs. Truxton Beale

By Dudley Harmon

IN ANSWER TO invitations printed in "Caslon Old Style" type, which was designed by a famous eighteenth century printer, Washington notables gathered last evening at the home of Mrs. Truxton Beale for an unusual entertainment.

Guests were asked to hear the "Four Howes," who are not a team of acrobats, as one might think at first, but Washington's own composer, Mary Howe (in private life Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe), and her three musical children. They sang and played a program of madrigals and old music for recorders and virginals.

The serenade was given in honor of Mrs. Beale's home, Decatur House, a perfect setting for the arts of past centuries. More celebrities have lived in this red brick residence on Lafayette Square than in any other private dwelling in the United States, Commodore Stephen Decatur and Henry Clay being only two of them. Candles still provide the only illumination and little else has been changed since the house was desiged in 1819 by Benjamin Latrobe, architect of the Capitol.

Mrs. Howe and her daughter, Molly, wore old-fashioned, floor-length robes-de-style to carry out the picture. Calderon and Bruce Howe were the other members of the team.

Guests included the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint-Quentin, the Danish Minister and Mme de Kauffmann, Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Dr. Hans Kindler, leader of the National Symphony Orchestra, and the Librarian of Congress and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish, the latter a well-known concert singer.

Countess Szechenyi Among Guests

Others present were Countess Szechenyi, who recently arrived to open her home here after an absence of many years; Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn and their daughter, Countess Guy de Bailliet-Latour, the former Ambassador to Spain and Mrs. Irwin Laughlin, Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis, Ulysses Grant-Smith, Angus Malcolm of the British embassy, the writer, Mrs. Winthrop Chanler, Mrs. John Bolt, Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, Mr. and Mrs. J. Pierrepont Moffat and Miss Sophie Stanton.

The "Four Howes" have given many a program before distinguished audiences to raise funds for the McDowell Colony at Peterborough, N. H., center for writers and artists which was started by the widow of the composer. When the old Dock Street Theater in Charleston, S. C., was remodeled several years ago, the "Four Howes" played and sang at the opening. They also have appeared at Yale University, Bryn Mawr College, Washington's Textile Museum, Milton Academy and the Greenwich House Music School in New York.

Music of Seventeenth Century Played

A Handel sonata for recorder and virginal was among the numbers which drew the most applause last evening. The virginal, a small edition of the harpsichord, only made with less octaves, and the recorder, which is an ancient instrument pre-dating the flute, are seldom heard these days.

Besides several other short pieces for these instruments, the guests heard madrigals which included Thomas Weelkes' sixteenth century "Lord When I Think," "Late in My Rash Accounting," and "Now is the Month of Maying." A difficult Palestrina madrigal, "Jesu Rex Admirabilis," and John Wall Calcott's "To All You Ladies" concluded the program.

Mary Howe's orchestral works, "Sand," "Dirge," "American Piece," to name only a few, have been played by the National Symphony, New York Philharmonic and Philadelphia Orchestras, London B. B. C. Orchestra, and many others here and abroad. Of her composition, "Sand," Leopold Stokowski said, "Your short but masterly work has developed in me a new conception of staccato, but this is only one of the many interesting elements in this composition."

Scores of Debutantes and Beaux Attend Affair at Chevy Chase Club; Parents Give Pair a Cocktail Party at Home

AT A MERRY "BRUNCH" given at the Chevy Chase Club yesterday morning and early afternoon two attractive sisters, the Misses Mary Tudor and Suzanne Morsell made their debut to the younger members of society.

Later in the afternoon at a cocktail party the two buds were introduced to a group of their parents' friends, when Mr. and Mrs. Tudor Morsell entertained at their home in Chevy Chase.

The main ballroom of the club, decked in its Christmas finery, was the scene of the party and the small tables spilled out to the wide closed porch.

Sydney's Mayflower lounge band played throughout the affair and the scores of debutantes with their beaux danced between coursese as well as later.

Standing before a screen covered with their bouquets were the hostesses, wearing frocks alike. Suzanne had donned dusty pink while Mary selected pale blue for her gown. They were made of sheer wool, with long sleeves, and full skirts quilted about the hem. They wore brief toques to match their gowns and snoods. Each girl had a cluster of orchids on her frock. Mrs. Morsell wore a maroon silk gown and orchids.

It was a very informal party and the girls had no assistants. On hand were their two grandmothers, Mrs. Herndon Morsell, of this city and Mrs. Edward H. Preston, of Philadelphia. Also down from Philadelphia were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Preston and Mr. and Mrs. Edward H. Preston, jr.

Assisting Mrs. Morsell were Mrs. Paul Putsky, Mrs. Harry Semmes, Mrs. Fred Reuter, Mrs. Henry Ravenel and Mrs. Custis Lee Hall.

At a 4:30 to 7 p. m. party yesterday, Miss Barbara Ramseyer was presented to society by her parents, Commissioner of the United States Court of Claims and Mrs. C. William Ramseyer, at their home, 3311 Rowland place.

Receiving in the drawing room with her mother, the debutante wore a gown fashioned with a bouffant skirt of white net, and a tight bodice of white taffeta with a print of American beauty and violet anemones and green leaves. The same print was appliqued down the front of the frock to form a most chic effect. With it she carried a old-fashioned nosegay of American beauty roses and violets.

Mrs. Ramseyer was gowned in blue crepe with an eton jacket trimmed with silver sequins, and a corsage of yellow roses. Miss Jane Ramseyer, the debutante's sister, who generally assisted during the afternoon, wore a gown of lipstick red taffeta with a tight-fitting jacket and a wristlet corsage of gardenias. Each of the assisting debs wore gardenia corsages.

The entire house featured a color scheme of pink. The dining table was decorated with pink roses, snapdragons and blue delphinium and lighted by tall blue tapers in silver holders.

After the tea the Ramseyers entertained for their daughter, the debutante assistants and their escorts at a dinner at the Shoreham Hotel, following which the group went on to the Merrill dance and the Spinster ball.

Since then he has been a commissioner with the Court of Claims.

Displays Are Now Being Built for A.A.U.W. Show

'Tomorrow's Citizen' to Be Theme Of Program Arranged With the Aid Of Experts in Social Service Fields

By Jessie Ash Arndt

Displays are being constructed for the "Tomorrow's Citizens" exhibit which will be staged during February by the Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women, with the cooperation of the Department of Labor and ther Federal and District agencies. Mrs. Charter Heslep, chairman of the social studies committee of the local A. A. U. W. is general chairman; Miss Margaret Klein, director of exhibits for the Department of Labor, and a member of the committee, is director of the project. Mrs. W. W. Werntz, chairman of the social welfare study group, is assisting.

The exhibit is being undertaken, according to Mrs. Heslep, to show the services provided by Federal and District agencies and private organizations affiliated with the Community Chest and the Council of Social Agencies. Because of limited space in the north foyer of the National Museum which has been offered for the displays, only groups coming under this classification could be included. If it proves worthwhile and there is a desire to have a successor, she plans to secure a larger place where all can participate.

Thought-Provoking Exhibit Is Planned

It is to be a thought-provoking exhibit, says Miss Klein, who is supervising the details of its arrangement. Ten subjects are being developed, each by a committee under the chairmanship of an authority in that field. They are: Recreation, under the chairmanship of Lewis Barrett, coordinator of recreation; education, under Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools; health, under Ray Everett, of the Social Hygiene Society; safety, under William Van Duzer, director of vehicles and traffic; civic responsibility, under Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen; public welfare, Robert E. Bondy, public welfare director; crime prevention, James V. Bennett, director of the Bureau of Prisons; consumer problems, Mary Taylor, editor of The Consumers' Guide of the AAA; housing, John Ihlder, of the Alley Dwelling Authority, and labor, Verne A. Zimmer, director of the Division of Labor Standards of the Department of Labor. Mrs. W. A. Roberts, executive secretary of the Council of Social Agencies, and Herbert L. Willett, director of the Community Chest, are also assisting.

The exhibits are all under way and are to have light, color and motion, says Miss Klein. They are designed to dramatize the civic and social problems of the city to arouse public consciousness of District needs and help to increase interest in seeking remedial action.

Causes and Cures Of Crime Included

The safety exhibit, which is near completion, will give the public a chance to see the inside of a parking meter and the working of a "walk" and "don't walk" sign. There will be a voting machine where visitors can register their opinions—of means to promote traffic safety and posters and charts will be displayed on accident prevention, both in homes and on the street.

The exhibit on crime prevention will be three-dimensional, with one side showing "steps to good citizenship" and the other side, those to "bad citizenship." On the side walls will be a display showing influences within the shadow of the Capital leading to delinquency, and the constructive things the city offers.

The health exhibit will show the co-operation of all of the medical agencies leading to the gateway designated as "Health."

Presidents of Washington organizations will be invited to the formal opening February 5.

The idea for sponsoring an exhibit rounding up all of the local problems in the field of social studies, was presented to Mrs. Heslep's committee by Miss Klein last May. It was approved and the members worked all summer, making tentative plans and selecting leaders in each of the ten subjects. By the end of August, plans were definite but not until the middle of November were they formally announced. It is the first time such a comprehensive exhibit in the field of social studies has been undertaken in Washington.

Honorary Chairmen are Miss Margaret Morriss, national president of the A. A. U. W., Mrs. William C. Van Vleck, president of the Washington branch, and Secretary of Labor Perkins.

Finnish Relief Concert Jan. 18

Mrs. Demarest Lloyd has taken over the Sulgrave Club for the concert and is donating it as her contribution to the causes.

Members of the committee arranging the concert are Mrs. Frederick H. Brooke, Mrs. Nelson Perin, Mrs. William McClellan Ritter, Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, Mrs. Vincent Miles, Miss Helen B. Page, Mrs. A. H. Ely, jr., Miss Alma Ruggles and Miss Anna Mitchell.

Helping Hands:

WPA Housekeeping Aides

Care of the Baby is Only One Chore

SEVENTY blue-uniformed women are helping needy Washington families stay together through times of crisis, under a unique District WPA project.

While the 70 daily work as mothers and housekeepers for strangers, 30 others are learning their duties in the three-story brick house at 61 I street northwest, which is training school headquarters for the Housekeeping Aide Project.

Here yesterday a shy, white-haired woman in crisp yellow uniform was demonstrating how to prepare meals with surplus commodities, in the basement kitchen, whose cupboard was an old filing cabinet. Upstairs a score of workers were starting their intensive one-week training program in care of children, sanitation, cleaning and laundering, budgeting and simple care of the sick.

On the third floor Miss Kathryn Durnell, project supervisor, showed the model apartment, neatly and barely decorated, which is to be a laboratory workshop for home care.

While the students here begin their daily eight hours of instruction with a reading of the Lord's Prayer and from the Bible, the working aides go out alone to homes where the mother is ill, children and house are without care, and there is no money to hire help.

The aides' working equipment is the blue uniform, white headband, work apron, personal towel and soap, scrub brush, scouring powder, tea towel and dust cloth. Beyond these, the aides are expected to work with whatever equipment they find in the home—cook with one pan if necessary, on any kind of stove.

With what she brings, and the available household equipment, her job is to do the laundry, scrub floors, care for the children—sometimes as many as 13—give such care to the sick as doctor or nurse orders, and in a dozen other ways become the perfect "stand-in" for the actual household head.

The women who do this work are all between 35 and 50, and heads of their own households. They are paid up to $57.20 a month. Their backgrounds all include experience in housekeeping.

The Aides Cook With Whatever Equipment They Find in a Home.

Beyond this, it would be hard to find a typical aide. Some have received college training in home economics, one was a chemistry stock clerk at a local university for many years, one lost her boarding house in a fire, another was housekeeper for a large apartment house.

Besides the normal routine in the homes they visit, they have turned in records for unusual jobs. In one home a housekeeping aide taught a little blind girl to sew. Another taught a 2-year-old to drink from a cup by playing a game with it.

In operation since March, 1938, the Housekeeping Aide Project has given help to nearly 1,700 families. While the aides do not act as nurses, District officials estimated that their care has saved the District an average of $40 for each case where they have made it unnecessary to provide hospital care for the parent.

T. W. Baxter Reports on Valuation

Reassessment in Prince Georges to Be Completed in March, He Says

Prince Georges County's general property reassessment will be completed early in March in time for the annual levy, Thomas W. Baxter, assessments supervisor, said yesterday.

The task of appraising some 60,000 pieces of property has been finished after seven months of work by a dozen appraisers.

Remaining, however, are hours of clerical work in recording new assessments. Hearings must be held on assessments in the Bowie, Lanham and Seat Pleasant districts as well as on all public utility appraisals.

Total estimated cost of the reassessment, Baxter said, is $50,000. It is anticipated, however, that the county assessable basis will be increased, providing additional tax revenue sufficient to pay for the reassessment.

The principal object of the reassessment, however, is not to increase the taxable basis," Baxter said, "but to equalize assessments."

A general property reassessment was due in 1932, but was postponed by successive acts of the Legislature until this year. The last reassessment was in 1927.

Since then the county has grown rapidly, particularly around Hyattsville, Mount Rainier, Colmar Manor, Cottage City, Bladensburg, University Park and College Park.

The appraisal of public utility property was conducted by John D. Hamilton of Baltimore.

A clerical staff of 17, working day and night shifts, assisted Baxter in mailing out notices of hearings and in recording new assessments.

Worker Killed, One Escapes in Ditch Cave-in Caused by Snow Loosening Earthen Wall

Laborer Rescued At Upper Marlboro After Accident

A 34-year-old District workman was suffocated yesterday when trapped in the cave-in of a sewer excavation in the 3000 block of Ordway street northwest. A Maryland laborer was rescued after more than an hour in a cave-in at Upper Marlboro.

James Barnes, colored, of 1021 Seventh street southeast, was the victim entombed at the bottom of the 9-foot ditch when 3 feet of the snow-moistened wall collapsed. Several tons of earth crashed down on Barnes.

James W. Contee, 41, colored, of Chapel, Md., WPA laborer on a sewer project at Upper Marlboro, was pinned in a 17-foot excavation when wood casings gave way. He was rescued by fellow workers after more than an hour. Contee was in Casualty Hospital last night with shoulder, back, and chest injuries.

Another workman at the District cave-in, Tillman Bullard, 40, was standing on the edge when the ditch wall collapsed. He was swept downward with the earth that buried Barnes but was able to climb out.

Bullard said he heard Barnes scream before he was covered by the avalanche of mud and snow.

Barnes and Bullard were laying sewer pipe to a nearby home. Two other workmen were in a similar ditch 20 feet away.

A crowd of more than 200 residents of Cleveland Park gathered as eight firemen and rescue squad members worked in relays for an hour and 40 minutes to extricate Barnes.

After the earth that half-filled the ditch had been dug away with shovels and crowbars, Barnes' body was pulled from the excavation at 5 p. m. The cave-in was at 3:20 p. m.

Aid Arlington Safety Drive, State Asked

Chamber Secretary Urges Highway Head To Cooperate in Limits on Speeding

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST, Clarendon, Va. Tel. OXford 0509.

Indorsing action by State and county police to reduce fatal accidents along Lee highway, the executive committee of the Arlington Chamber of Commerce yesterday directed the secretary to communicate with State Highway Commissioner Col. H. G. Shirley, urging him to co-operate.

Local authorities Thursday ordered the speed limit on a 2½-mile stretch of the highway reduced to 25 miles an hour.

The secretary wrote to Col. Shirley, in part:

"The executive committee strongly indorses the action which the State and county police have taken to end the killing of pedestrians along a dangerous section of the Lee highway, and we trust that you will in every way cooperate with them in reducing the speed limits along all State roads within the county."

Col. Shirley already has assured County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan that he is willing to cooperate with county authorities in meeting their traffic problems and will offer no resistance to any efforts made before the Legislature to vest traffic regulatory powers in county officials.

Tie Vote on Zoning

The county board was deadlocked yesterday by tie votes on proposals to rezone to residential A from local business two tracts of land along Lee boulevard. The question will come up again at a meeting of the new board meeting January 14.

Mrs. Elizabeth B. Magruder was absent, leaving the board with only four members to vote.

Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas expressed an opinion that in case of a tie vote the question should be deferred to the next meeting.

Attorney Frank L. Ball, appearing for one of the property owners involved, opposed the delay and declared the action has resulted in the commercial zoning remaining unchanged. He threatened to take the matter to court.

The properties involved were that of Albert H. Cohen, at Lee boulevard and Pershing drive in rear of the stables at Fort Myer, and that of Joseph D. McDonnell at Hatfield.

The properties were advertised for rezoning by the county board on a motion by Member George M. Yeatman at a recent meeting.

The zoning appeal board at its last meeting refused to submit any recommendations to the county board on either of the properties.

Expenditures amounting to $28,189.01, of which $15,747.76 represented the payroll, were approved.

Pastor to Entertain

Parkers' Nemesis, Traffic Tags Ignored, Waits to Catch Cars

Policeman Bankert Either Grabs Owners Or Has Machine Impounded in Crusade Aimed at Nearby Residents Who Evade Law

Motorcycle Policeman R. O. Bankert, the parker's nemesis, who tags up to 500 cars a month for overtime parking, has started another campaign—this time against Maryland and Virginia drivers who fail to respond on traffic notices.

Circumstances during the past six months prompted the crusade, which has netted six multiple offenders on 37 charges. They were made to post a total of $86 collateral.

Bankert explained that since he was mounted on his three-wheeled motorcycle with instructions "to get" motorists who park illegally, he has placed thousands of tickets. Many Government workers from Maryland and Virginia have received ticket after ticket without posting collateral, he said.

He took steps and made a list of all automobiles on which he has placed two or more tickets, the owners of which have failed to appear. He keeps the list with him, and whenever he spots one of the cars, either waits for the driver, or calls the police crane and has the car impounded.

His victims so far include Henry C. Walburn, 25, of Arlington, Va., ten overtime tickets, which cost $23; Leon G. Smoczyuski, 40, Colonial Village, six parking charges, $13; John H. Verkonteren, 45, Chevy Chase, Md., five tickets, $13; Ellsworth E. Van Meter, 29, Arlington, Va., five tickets, $11; Sherman R. Baggett, Arlington, three tickets, $6; Gertrude G. Pewett, 27, Chevy Chase, Md., three charges, $6, and Thomas King, 49, of Silver Spring, Md., five charges, $14.

Bankert now has recruited the Traffic Division street patrol and vows that he will "get every offender."

General Construction Strike May Mar District New Year

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

A general tie-up of Government and private construction may usher 1940 into Washington, it appeared yesterday, as the outgrowth of an A. F. of L. jurisdictional dispute which already has cost more than 200 jobs on the Lafayette Building.

Union officials, including the president of the A. F. of L. building and construction trades department, declined to comment on the family row, but from Federal, contracting and other responsible sources the following was learned by The Post:

Work is all but paralyzed on the new Lafayette Building, Fifteenth and I streets northwest, the result of a strike by union laborers in protest against the handling of reinforcing rods, up to the point of installation, by members of the Rodmen's Union.

The laborers, angered by their failure to receive the disputed work, despite the recent reaffirmation of an A. F. of L. decision which they interpret in their favor, are reported to be planning a general city-wide walkout to support their demands.

The American Federation of Labor is attempting to settle the controversy, which has national implications, at the same time adopting a hush-hush policy because of the embarrassing position in which it has been placed. Last spring the A. F. of L. pledged that there would be no more jurisdictional fights in its building trades department.

Conference in which John P. Coyne, president of the department, and heads of the affected unions are participating are under way and a decision is scheduled to be handed down by Coyne early next week.

A general laborers' strike, which would cripple operations on the Census, Social Security, Railroad Retirement, Municipal Center and numerous other Government projects, is held not unlikely, though a high ranking Federal executive said that "with the Department of Justice investigating organized labor it's hardly probable that any unnecessary risk of incurring Government displeasure will be undertaken."

Members of the Building Laborers' Union were ordered out at the Lafayette building, a 12-story office structure financed with RFC money, on December 21. Approximately 50 men figured in the walkout.

On December 21 some 325 workmen in the various building trades reported on the Lafayette job. Yesterday less than 100 were employed, according to an official census, and operations were seriously handicapped.

With the laborers out, the carpenters, engineers, truck drivers and most of the other mechanics are affected, with the result that about 200 have had to be laid off.

The quarrel between the two unions is over the handling of rods between two points of unloading and installation. Rodmen claim they have had jurisdiction since 1918. The laborers cited a 1920 decision by the A. F. of L.'s old board of jurisdictional awards, giving them the work.

This decision provides that laborers shall handle the rods, except in cases where agreements exist between rodmen and employers, when the laborers shall postpone taking over control until the agreements have expired.

The rodmen's union has a year-to-year agreement with an employers' association, the latest having been signed last summer, but following Coyne's recent reaffirmation of the 1920 decision the laborers decided to demand a showdown.

An odd slant on the quarrel is that while both the laborers' and rodmen's unions are affiliated with the A. F. of L., the former's Washington local is not a member of the Washington Building Trades Council, local departmental unit of the A. F. of L.

Had the Lafayette Building contractor—Thompson-Starrett Co., Inc.—taken the disputed work away from the rodmen and given it to the laborers, the council-affiliated trades would probably have staged a sympathy walkout, bringing about an even worse situation than now exists.

The union laborer wage scale in Washington is 75 cents an hour, while rodmen, who are affiliated with the Iron Workers' International Union, receive $1.62½.

New members have recruited other members with the result class membership has jumped from 18 to 105 in seven weeks.

Merit System Urged for Virginians

Advisory Council Recommends to Price Creation Of Career Service

Richmond, Va., Dec. 29.—A merit basis for appointments, promotions and tenure in classified service of the State government was recommended today by the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council.

"It can be anticipated," said the council in a report to Gov. Price on a study of the personnel question, "that in Virginia we shall see the development of a career service with promotion from the ranks. Such a system will be intimately connected with the educational system of the Commonwealth both in pre-entry and in-service training."

Responsibility for "over - all supervision" of personnel would remain in the hands of the Governor under the council's plan.

The recommendations were drawn by a subcommittee of the council composed of Delegate Francis P. Miller, of Fairfax, chairman; Virginius Dabney, Richmond; Dr. Rowland A. Egger, director of the budget; Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrissett, Prof. Warner Moss, of William and Mary, and E. J. Robeson, jr., of Newport News. The committee report was adopted, with some minor changes, by the council headed by Senator John S. Battle, of Charlottesville.

In 1936 among 7,000 permanent male employes, the report said, there were 600 different rates of pay. Total pay of the group was more than $8,000,000 a year.

Since then, the council reported, there has been great improvement, but it advised up-to-date classification and compensation plans were essential.

Columbia Heights Liquor Sales Banned

Court Sustains Citizens' Appeal; Wine, Beer Exempt

Columbia Heights residents yesterday won in the Court of Appeals their fight to enforce a ban on the sale of "spirituous liquor" in the area bounded by Eleventh and Fourteenth streets, Florida avenue and Park road northwest.

"There is room in Washington for those who like and for those who dislike to live near liquor stores," said the court. "It pleases them (Columbia Heights citizens) to live at a distance from liquor stores. By buying property in Columbia Heights they bought that privilege."

The court held, however, that the ban did not extend to light wines and beer, and ordered a decision of the District Court modified to permit their sale.

Justice Henry White Edgerton, who wrote the opinion, pointed out that between 1881 and 1889 the owner of Columbia Heights tract broke up the property into lots and sold them under deeds requiring that "no spirituous liquors" would be sold in any buildings in the area.

"It is evident the liquor covenants are part of a general plan for the benefit of all the land in the tract," said Justice Edgerton. "That they are beneficial only from certain points of view and in relation to certain purposes is nothing against them; as much may be said of any restrictive covenant.

"Any covenant benefits those whose purposes it serves and burdens those whose purposes it thwarts. That is why covenants are made; if a given plan were beneficial absolutely, self-interest alone could be relied upon to secure conformity.

"Covenants, like zoning laws, segregate conflicting purposes and so promote their greater satisfaction."

While citing the fact that several liquor stores were in operation just outside the boundary, on the west side of Fourteenth street, the court said that "a liquor store across a wide and busy street, is not the same thing as a liquor store on one's own side."

"If liquer may be sold today on the east side of Fourteenth street because it is sold on the west side, tomorrow it may be sold just east of the east side because it is sold on the east side, and so on," said Justice Edgerton.

The ruling pointed out that one drug store in the area sold liquor for medicinal purposes during prohibition, and that in other buildings alcoholic drinks are now, or are about to be sold, but Justice Edgerton declared that "even such sales violate the covenant, it does not follow that the covenant has been waived."

An injunction Columbia Heights residents obtained to keep out liquor stores had been suspended pending the Court of Appeals decision.

Flight on Way to Miami Meet; Red Cross Sends Shipment for Poland

More than 100 planes, piloted by amateur fliers en route from New York to the annual National Light Airplane meet at Miami, were grounded at the Hybla Valley Airport near Alexandria yesterday by poor flying conditions.

The fleet of planes attracted a throng of visitors to the airport yesterday, while the pilots were spending the day sightseeing.

Clothing Sent Poles

The Alexandria Red Cross Chapter completed the first step in its program of relief for European refugees yesterday, when a consignment of 193 garments was shipped to New York. The articles will be sent to international headquarters in Europe, to be distributed among Polish women and children.

The sweaters were knit under direction of Mrs. Robert Graham.

The shipment, exclusive of the sweaters, represents 644 hours of labor contributed by volunteer workers, Miss Jones said. The production committee has been in operation since December 10, completing its program at an estimated cost of $115.

While the first shipment was designated for Polish relief, the committee will resume production in the near future to provide garments for Finnish refugees, Miss Jones stated. # 'Gulliver' Is Denatured on Palace Screen

Feature Cartoon Of Swift Satire Is Sweet, Not Bitter

Fairy-tale, satire, romance and sermon, "Gulliver's Travels," the Palace's feature-length color cartoon, delights the younger generation as much as it would disgust Jonathan Swift.

For it is through the fairy-story appeal to children that Dave Fleischer has decided he can achieve the widest audience for his 75-minute, comic-strip version of one of the world's bitterest satires. On the basis of results it would be difficult to argue that the experience cartoonist was unwise, for lines at the Palace box-office and chuckles from childish throats were the rule at yesterday's opening showings.

But it is this very definitely infantile appeal which will limit the film's stanchest admirers to the younger generation. The insertion of a prosaic romance into a story with enough novel motivation to fill a dozen films even further restricts this Gulliver within the realm of childhood.

For what it is, however, we must admit, "Gulliver's Travels" will very likely charm the children at a time of year when they are traditionally to be charmed. They will find Gabby and his friends "cute" and their antics in mastering the man-mountain intriguing.

Limited To Lilliput

Of Lemuel Gulliver's many and fascinating travels, the film is limited to his adventures among the Lilliputians, those little people whose serious business of living struck Swift as being so minutely ridiculous. Gulliver lands on their shores, is found by the Town Crier, bound in bonds that are easily broke, and then made into an adversary for the warlike Blefuscu people. Into all this the scenarists have folded a cloying romance between the offspring of the warring neighbors. The wedding song of one nation is "Faithful," and of the other "Forever." Pacifier Gulliver settles this by merging them "Faithful Forever!"

Comparisons being as inevitable as they are odious, we must frankly admit that this, no matter how amusing in spots it may be, is no "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs." While it lacks the nightmare qualities that banned the Disney work from the British Isles, it also lacks the earlier film's easy wit and grace. Gabby, the Town Crier, is a funny fellow, and his humor does much to alleviate the stereotyped romance between the young, "pretty-as-a-picture" couple.

There are several attractive tunes scattered into the score. "Hap, Hap, Happy Day" and "Faithful Forever" are bound to be chanted over the air and are sung pleasantly by Jessica Dragonette and Lanny Ross in the film. The Technicolor process is equally easy to watch and the many technical difficulties in a cartoon of such length are well handled.

Innocuous Fairy Tale

But no matter how happy this new Gulliver may make the children, one cannot help but pity further the unhappy Dean of Dublin, whose galling irony time has turned into an innocuous fairy-tale that is even more harmless to the coming generation than "Snow White."

One of those exceptionally fine short subjects in the "Crime Does Not Pay" series, "Pound Foolish," deals with the smuggling racket which occupied our front pages not so long ago. Gertrude Michael, Victor Varconi and Neil Hamilton make this an engrossing detective drama. "Mark Carlton," a "Passing Parade" release, dramatizes the career of the man who is responsible for the success of our wheat belt, but who died unappreciated in a foreign land.

The "News of the Day" contains a resume of the newsreel's waning year and completes a bill that is for the young in age.

RICHARD L. COE.

Metropolitan

Once a zebra, always a zebra. That's the guiding motif of "Invisible Stripes." A released convict may drop his striped suit, but he continues to be plainly marked by the invisible stripes of the ex-con. Not a cheerful nor original thought, it has been the backbone of many great stories beginning with "Les Miserables," so far as we remember.

No better protagonists for this type of opus could have been chosen than George Raft, Humphrey Bogart and young William Holden. George and Humphrey ooze social poison as roses distill dew. Between them they keep the innocent William tottering on the brink of crime like the famed maid at the river's edge. Once or twice he even gets his feet wet.

All this is no derogation of "Invisible Stripes." It has the candid camera click of one of those true detective stories that are such fascinating reading. Its one bank robbery and attempted pay roll robbery flicker with a high-speed and painful realism—so convincing that you think robberies must really be like that—a tense chess game played without pauses and with sudden death the penalty of a wrong move.

A Slum Background

George Raft's brief life of crime has the familiar slum background. He finishes his first "stretch" with the also familiar determination to go straight. But he can't get his feet on solid ground. Jobs evaporate beneath him. Then his young brother (William Holden) begins to go wrong. Says George, "I'll have to do this rags to riches stuff the fast way." So he joined a gang of bank robbers, telling his family that he's on the road selling tractors. Soon he has money enough to set his young brother up in a garage, is riding on top of the world. All this isn't according to the way crime ought to turn out. But wait. The payoff is coming. George quits the gang, plans to take his cut and really go straight this time. But when his former pals get into trouble, are facing the chair, they involve both him and his family. The last words of George's story are spoken by guns, and explicitly.

There is no end of good playing in "Invisible Stripes." Humphrey Bogart's performance as "Chuck," the bank robber, is the most realistic, finest shaded of the group. Raft, of course, can play a gangster standing on his head. Flora Bobson is touching as the overworked, disappointed, but always hopeful and faithful mother. Jane Bryan again shows great promise as the gentle and unpretending girl friend of the younger brother. William Holden is all right, but has symptoms of having been catapulted too quickly into leading parts.

Louella Parsons' "Stars of 1940" Pack Capitol; Martha Raye and "Four Wives" Jam the Earle

Holiday Crowds Are Ecstatic Over Film Beauties' Rich Talents; "Dr. Kildare" Returns

Louella O. Parsons, The Post's Hollywood columnist, and her "Hollywood Stars of 1940," appearing in person on the stage, and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of "The Secret of Dr. Kildare," with Lionel Barrymore and Lew Ayres, took Washington by storm yesterday and packed Loew's Capitol Theater to the rafters all day long.

BELL

It is a neatly turned act that Miss Parsons brings to town, handsomely presented and nicely routined, with the members of her "company" filling the stage with more feminine pulchritude than any local rostrum has supported in six months of Sundays.

The setting is Miss Parsons' studio office in Hollywood, where she is conducting a quest for the "stars of 1940." The candidates are introduced, one by one, in the charming and soundly talented persons of Arleen Whelan, Susan Hayward, Jane Wyman, Joy Hodges and June Preisser, with the stalwart and good-looking Ronald Reagan hovering around as a sort of assistant master of ceremonies to Miss Parsons and first aid to the versatile young women who wish to "act out" scenes requiring masculine support. Miss Parsons, in the meantime, sits at her desk and ladles out last-minute news flashes from Hollywood and answers questions submitted by patrons of the theater. There is a pleasant flow of comedy throughout her individual contributions to a unique and engaging offering.

Some Surprising Talents

There are more than a few surprises popped at the audience by the "Stars of 1940." For example, it turns out that Arleen Whelan is possessed of a more than ordinarily good contralto singing voice that the films should have made use of long ago. It is splendidly displayed in "Siboney," winning the auburn-haired Miss Whelan an armful of applause that would have been good for three or four encores, if that severe cold of hers had permitted her to take them. Susan Hayward and Jane Wyman, both enlist Mr. Reagan as leading man in their humorous skits and walk away with high honors. Joy Hodges, remembered with George M. Cohan in "I'd Rather Be Right," tops anything she ever did in that musical hit, by smashing over "Blue Skies" for a perfect bullseye. Little June Preisser also is a known quantity to Washington audiences and "wowed" yesterday's overflow customers with her song and acrobatic dances. The Jane Wyman-Ronald Reagan tomfoolery purported to be a scene from the Warners' new production of "Brother Rat and the Baby"—if it was, that new release will be a very funny picture. The Susan Hayward-Ronald Reagan business was an equally amusing "love scene," in which Mr. Reagan got a little the worst of it at the business end of a dagger.

Miss Parsons and all of her charges are to be congratulated upon having brought so well-rounded and thoroughly diverting a "production" East from the studios.

Drama In a Hospital

"The Secret of Dr. Kildare," of course, is the latest addition to the growing list of medico-dramatic subjects that already have taken such a firm hold on public interest. It is generously sprinkled with comedy of a therapeutical sort, with Lionel Barrymore having most of the pithiest lines to speak. Lew Ayres deserts his elderly mentor in this one to save his life and restore a psychological case to normalcy by curing a beautiful young Park Avenue deb of purely imaginary ills. Helen Gilbert, as the clinical subject; Laraine Day, as the young nurse; Alma Kruger as the older one; Emma Dunn, Samuel S. Hinds, Nat Pendleton, Sara Haden, Walter Kingsford and Grant Mitchell are foremost among those who lend interest to a serio-comic item that is fortunate in being so elaborately surrounded on the Capitol's New Year's bill.

A "community sing" overture—during which the audience really sang yesterday—under the conductorship of Don Donato; the Rhythm Rockets and Raymond Wilbert and his hoops, augmenting the stage bill, and the Fox Movietone News complete a rich and sparkling entertainment.

Among the 'Stars of 1940'

JANE WYMAN,
one of the glamorous young screen celebrities, appearing with The Post's Hollywood columnist, Louella Parsons, on the stage at Loew's Capitol Theater this week. Miss Wyman's "bit" in the panoramic parade of Hollywood beauty is a brief comedy skit, with Ronald Reagan, who is, incidentally, her betrothed

"Daughters" Sequel Is Appealing Film; Martha Raye Is the New Eva Tanguay

The amusing, sometimes deeply emotional and always "homey" appeal of "Four Wives," the Warner Brothers' sequel to "Four Daughters"—with most of the original cast and a few helpful additions—in combination with the explosive dynamics of Martha Raye, on the stage, conspired to throw continuous capacity crowds into prolonged paroxysms of enthusiasm at the Earle Theater yesterday. Seldom, if ever, has a local theater presented a holiday bill better calculated to arouse the ardor of amusement-seekers.

"Four Wives" may not be the minutely convincing reflection of American home life that its predecessor was, but it is a sufficiently deft composite of the humor, trials, crises and triumphs of a household of four young brides to satisfy every reasonable public fancy. It is, in certain facets of its development, a little too obstetrical to be completely comfortable, but there is so much to offset this accent on parenthood that the final effect is preponderantly favorable.

Atones for Earlier Error

One of the outstanding features of this picture is the adroit way in which it atones for having killed off John Garfield in the final reels of "Four Daughters." His posthumous baby is the chief factor of motivation in the new play. By this token, his widow, Priscilla Lane—or, if you prefer, Ann Kemp Borden—comes into possession of the most exacting role in the drama, and so is enabled once again to demonstrate that she is a young actres who is making tremendous strides in the direction of dramatic stature since the days when, with her sister Rosemary, she was merely a youthful songstress with Fred Waring's Pennsylvanians. It is the opportunity to renew his courtship of the youngest of the Lemp girls also, that affords Jeffrey Lynn the chance to prove that he is a better actor than many of his recent roles in other films have indicated.

Except for the addition of Eddie Albert and Henry O'Neill, the remainder of the cast appear in familiar assignments. Claude Rains again is the harassed "music master," Adam Lemp, and May Robson continues as the ubiquitous Aunt Emma. The other three Lemp girls still are portrayed by Lola and Rosemary Lane and Gale Page and their swains and suitors by Frank McHugh and Dick Foran, with Eddie Albert the added starter, as I have said, who very comfortably fills Garfield's shoes. But even Mr. Garfield is effectively "faded in" to a scene or two to make the roster complete.

Some of the comedy seems to be dragged in more or less by the heels, but in the large view, "Four Wives" is as "sure-fire" in its audience appeal as was "Four Daughters." That was proved by its reception yesterday by the biggest crowds of the year.

Martha a Revelation

And if the stage has been looking for another Eva Tanguay, there she is, in the ebullient person of Martha Raye. Miss Raye yesterday uncorked an electric personality and a comic infallibility that had the cash customers doing their best to blow the roof off the theater with the violence of their acclaim. Martha doesn't go in much for finesse or the more delicate manifestations of vocal art. She is out there to blast the gentry right out of their seats and that is what she does. The girl was a revelation yesterday, even to those of us who "caught" her first with Benny Davis, years ago, and thought we knew all about her capabilities. We didn't know the half of it, Martha Raye, turned loose on that stage, is a bolt of lightning.

The stage portion of the bill is opened by the Lazenders, the Australian "acromaniacs," who begin where most gymnasts leave off. They are three men and a girl. Wences, the ventriloquist-juggler, comes next with the top offering of its kind in captivity and the Gracella Dancers, again three men and a girl, demonstrate the ultimate in adagio. Jack Williams serves as master of ceremonies and in his own individual turn proves himself a tap dancer who belongs up there with Fred Astaire, Bill Robinson and Paul Draper.

Jo Lombardi's orchestra, on stage this week, and the Universal News complete a bill that is about as near as such things ever get to satisfying the mass yen for agreeable distraction.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Dec. 29.

F. D. R.: In view of your recent peace appeal to the Pope, you might be interested in the program WNYC will present at noon on New Year's Day . . . It will be a 15-minute program, opening with religious music. Then, from a studio room where he will sit alone, Mayor LaGuardia will deliver "The Mayor's New Year's Prayer"—an eight-minute plea covering the problems of Europe and the world as they are reflected in this democratic community of ours.

ELSA MAXWELL: Lucius Beebe lost his underwear Tuesday night in a scavenger hunt whose participants were a group of young socialites. . . . One of the prize objects was Beebe's shorts.. Dick Rossback, who won the hunt, located Beebe at Station WOR, where he was broadcasting his drama review, and told him of the scavenger hunt . . . Lucius obliged, retired to a private room and surrendered his shorts.

ERSKINE CALDWELL: Jack Kirkland, who dramatized your book, "Tobacco Road," was hit by a car on West Fourty-fourth street at midnight last night. He suffered no hurt, however . . . Bob Gregory: Your mother-in-law, the Ranee of Sarawak, completed her first novel this week, and it will be in the hands of the publishers tomorrow . . . Will Hays: Gene Fowler now is up and about. But Leo McCarey, who was injured with him in that auto crash, will require seven operations before he can be well again . . . William F. Green: Last night's report was that Dorothy Bryant, head of the recently formed American Guild of Variety Artists, is planning to resign.

VINCENT SHEEAN: Your friend, Leland Stowe—the white-haired foreign correspondent—was in Helsinki last week, where the Finns presented him with a reindeer . . . Stowe hesitated before making his speech of acknowledgment . . . He patted the reindeer, rubbed his prematurely white hair and then said: "If my beard could grow out white to match my hair, I'd play Santa Claus."

DARRYL ZANUCK: Dorothy Parker, who saw a preview of "The Grapes of Wrath," has written a fan letter to you. It's her first movie fan letter . . . Clark Gable: Your former wife, Josephine Dillon Gable, will write a book. Hal Mattson has signed her to write a volume about the motion picture colony.

GINGER ROGERS: Christopher Morley received $50,000 for the movie rights to "Kitty Foyle"—which RKO purchased for you. After so many years of ranking among America's foremost writers, this is the first time Morley ever had so much money . . . Incidentally, as a result of this purchase, Paramount wants Morton Gill Clark's book, "Grace, I Give You," for Carole Lombard. The theme is a similar one.

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT: Some weeks ago Ben de Casseres wrote the only bad notice given to "The Man Who Came to Dinner." He referred to the dialogue as "dribble" and said that it was "uttered by a bewhiskered jackass in a wheelchair" . . . Monty Woolley, who portrays you in that wheelchair, had an elaborate Christmas card printed containing a reprint of that article. The accompanying sketch shows him in the wheelchair, with a pair of jackass ears protruding from his head.

IRVING BERLIN: Simon & Schuster's next "Treasury" book will be a "Treasury of American Songs." It will be almost a year before publication . . . Hugh Johnson: Laurence Stallings, who coined the phrase, "The First World War," as the title for a picture-book some years ago, will write a series called "The Second World War" for Look magazine.

MARC CONNELLY: The Calypso singers whom you discovered still are affecting Broadway. Al Jolson will sing Calypso songs in his new show . . . Herbert Hoover: Hendrik Willem van Loon, who is writing a book about Beethoven, will discontinue it for three months to devote all his time to aiding Finland.

In Hollywood

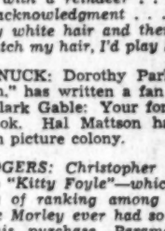
—With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Dec. 29.

Now that they include all foreign pictures in the Academy awards, which I think is only just, I believe they should go a step further and give a special award to "GWTW." It's not fair to put that in with the others. After all, it took them two years to make it, and they had an unlimited bankroll. And how can you compare that with a picture that's been made in six or eight weeks? And the pictures that get the Academy awards are ones our fans can see 52 weeks out of the 52. It would have been a sad day for our fans if they'd waited two years for "GWTW" or a year for "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington."



HOPPER

Hollywood's very disgruntled because many big parties had been planned for the opening of "Gone" and no more than two seats will be sold to any one person, and it doesn't matter who you are. I could sell my tickets for $50, but I'm so crazy about it, I'm going to see it again, thank you!

Quite a romance between socialite Forrest Tucker, who will make his first appearance in "The Westerner" with Gary Cooper and Helen Parrish. Helen and her mother visited Tucker on location and arranged to have a band meet her at the plane, and he wrote songs commemorating the occasion. I overheard him trying to pin her down to an early marriage, but Helen's a little afraid that might break her career. And she's made for his Christmas present a scrap book with every photograph she could lay her hands on of the object of her affections . . . One of our much married males who recently married for the fourth time made the mistake of letting his marriage certificate get into one of his friends' hands. When he finally got it back, two words were rubberstamped over the face of the license: "NOT TRANSFERABLE," it read . . . In talking with Ralph Spence the other day, who's doing the life story of O'Henry—with his widow, Mrs. William Sidney Porter, I learned that his stories have been translated into every foreign language. In Germany before the war, the study of O'Henry was compulsory. And there are O'Henry clubs all over the world. And if that isn't a ready-made audience I never heard of one—and he's been dead 29 years.

Harold Clurman, head of the Group Theater, boarded a plane for the first time in his life to fly to the Coast to consult with John Garfield on the play the latter will do next March, "Heavenly Express." He was worried white—until he spotted a familiar face sitting next to him, then all his worries disappeared. "Nothing can happen to her" he consoled himself, smiling at Kate Hepburn . . . Speaking of traveling, Dame Mae Whitty probably holds the world's record so far as commuting actresses are concerned. She came here from England in 1895, when she made her first New York stage appearance. Since then she's averaged two trips per year. She's crossed during two wars, says submarines thrill her. And as soon as she's finished her present role in "Bill of Divorcement" she'll scurry right back to England, war or no war . . . When Charlie Winninger was 12 years old and his brother Adolph was 13, they started trouping with a trapeze act. Since then, they've been together in vaudeville and on the legitimate stage, and were equally successful. But when they came to Hollywood, it was only Charlie's personality that clicked, and brother Adolph became his standin and valet. They still live together, and Charlie sees to it that his brother receives the same respect and consideration that he himself does. And they look so much alike that now on the "And So Goodybye" set they're constantly being mistaken for one another.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Who is the "Man of the Year" in the movie world? No matter who wins the various "Man of the Year" honors in other quarters, Hollywood is torn between several candidates who, for various reasons or other, have been outstanding in movietown in 1939.

LOUELLA PARSONS

If we are counting boxoffice winners, Mickey Rooney is undoubtedly head man, having just been selected as the No. 1 boxoffice attraction of 1939. And Mickey deserves the honor of most certainly being the star of the year.

On the other hand, how can we possibly overlook David O. Selznick, whose remarkable picture "Gone With the Wind" is the most sensational film since "The Birth of a Nation." David, whom I have known since he was a little boy, won Atlanta single-handed—and his great courage and fight in bringing Margaret Mitchell's famous novel to the screen, makes him 1939's most colorful producer.

If you are talking about actors of the year—there are such nominees as Laurence Olivier (for "Wuthering Heights"); Charles Boyer (for "Love Affairs"); and Robert Donat (for "Goodbye, Mr. Chips") well up in the running.

For the most-talked-about new personality in Hollywood this past year—there's Orson Welles.

And for the most surprised man of the Hollywood year, I nominate Al Jolson—because Ruby Keeler really went through with her divorce.

What's all this I hear about Katharine Hepburn making a secret flying trip of two days to Hollywood to huddle with M-G-M? Of course, the official conversations are concerned with La Hepburn's starring in her Broadway hit "The Philadelphia Story," although no one at the studio will admit negotiations are under way. In fact, more than once they've vehemently denied they will fork over the big price demanded for the play plus Hepburn. They've always claimed if they buy it at all, they want it for one of their own stars. But the New York producers are holding firmly to their bargain—it's Kathie with "Philadelphia Story" or no sale.

Wesley Ruggles joins the exodus to London, the minute he finishes "Too Many Husbands" to start the ball rolling for a Columbia production over there. War or no war, almost every Hollywood studio is preparing to start production again in England. Bob Montgomery and Ben Goetz are already over there for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Herbert Wilcox is returning soon with his star, Anna Neagle, for RKO and Paramount are looking over the situation for at least one British produced film next year. It should be comforting to the Europeans to learn that Hollywood producers, at least, aren't taking the war very seriously.

Snapshots of Hollywood and Washington collected at random: Visited the Bureau of Federal Investigation during our lunch hour. Joseph Mulcahy, Jack's dad, is associated with Frank Murphy in this department of the Government; Martha Raye is our competition in Washington this week. She is playing at the Earle Theater and I'm sorry I can't catch her act; Eastern papers played up Bob Hope's supposed nervous collapse in a big way—but I'm glad to hear from the Coast that the stories are exaggerated. He's already back in his Hollywood home after a short rest at Palm Springs; Gene Kornmann, portrait artist at Twentieth Century-Fox, has just published a book on photography, "Lighting the Stars," with Linda Darnell's picture on the cover.

Ann Warner and Dolores Del Rio invited 125 couples to their New Year's eve party before they made up their minds where they were giving it. At the last minute they decided against a cafe and the beautiful Warner home will be the scene of the party; Gail Patrick playing hostess to the whole Tennessee football team—and don't think ears in Washington won't be glued to the radio listening to the Rose Bowl game between the Vols and U. S. C.; can hardly believe it's opening day at Santa Anita and I'm not there to pick some winnahs!

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Louella O. Parsons and her "Hollywood Stars of 1940" are now appearing in person on the stage at Loew's Capitol Theater.

With Shirley Povich

Was it a bad heart or a simple case of heartbreak that caused Gus Sonnenberg to retire from wrestling? Not that Gustave's decision to quit the rassling wars makes much difference. It's effect on the national scene is practically nil, and the world will manage, somehow, to struggle along with one fewer wrestler. But mayhap the doctors were wrong when they diagnosed Sonnenberg's ailment as a bum ticker.

POVICH

Certainly there is evidence that a plain, old-fashioned broken heart may have hastened Gustave's exit from the decadent racket. The last bout he committed might well have been the crusher. It was against Christofer Theofeles, who by any other name would still be Jim Londos. They drew a gate of $1,100, a crowd of only 1,700. That kind of money was tipping change for Sonnenberg and Londos in the lush days of their game.

Ten years ago, Sonnenberg and Londos looked down their noses at a match that would fetch them a gate of $100,000 at Yankee Stadium. It was wrestling's succulent era, with thousands to be earned six times a week in their own territories. Their individual claims to what is now laughingly known as the world title, were too valuable to risk in a show-down match. A $100,000 gate wasn't worth it.

Mat Promoters Owe Gustave a Debt

There is no evidence that Sonnenberg, who must have earned a million in the wrestling ring, is in want, but if he were, it would be the moral duty of every wrestling promoter in the land to bankroll him. Because it was the short, squat former footballer from Dartmouth who turned on the golden flow of wrestling's once-tremendous profits.

Wrestling was a moribund racket when Sonnenberg came out of Dartmouth with his football clippings and needled new life into the game by his mere presence. He revolutionized wrestling as a spectator sport, even if he profaned the art of it. He put wrestling on its feet by wrestling on his feet, making it a stand-up battle instead of the lack-luster groveling on the canvas which rendered the game no more interesting to the fan than a telegraphic chess match.

Wrestling began to hum from the moment the old Dartmouth tackle brought his football tricks onto the mat. From the moment he sank his baldish head into the fat tummy of Strangler Lewis to knock that old-timer out of the ring and win some sort of a claim to the title, wrestling began to prosper. Sonnenberg called his maneuver the flying tackle but it was no more akin to a tackle than a chip shot to the green.

Started March of Grid Stars to Mat

At first, Sonnenberg's fame was confined to Boston, but as he continued to knock the old standbys of the mat game out of the ring with his flying tackle, wrestling fans about the country began to take note. So did other former football players. Ed Don George, George Trafton, Joe Savoldi. They were famous figures before they went on the mat. They could command the publicity that the old guard couldn't. They didn't know a headlock from a toe hold, but that didn't make any difference. Their stand-up tactics were more exciting.

In a fair wrestling match, none of these former campus heroes could whip the worst of the old guard, and the promoters were well aware of that fact, if the fans weren't. Anyway, defeat for their new heroes was always to be guarded against, and the Lewises, the Zbyszkos, the Garibaldis and Terrible Turks were finally cast as little more than stooges for the football stars turned rasslers.

Originally, it was big Wayne Munn, fresh off the Nebraska football team, who actually brought football to wrestling and there was quite a commotion when Munn threw Strangler Lewis out of the ring and claimed Lewis' title. But Munn was too much of a ham to endure as even a synthetic champion. One of the Zbyszkos, Wladek, we believe, rebelled at stooging for Munn and slammed him to the mat twice in 15 minutes to put an end to the first collegiate reign of rassling.

It Must Have Been a Sad Night for Gus

Sonnenberg, though, had a more careful manager than Munn. And Gustave managed to pick up enough tricks of the ancient trade to quell any attempted double-cross by other than the best of the old-timers. Five thousand bucks for a night's work was no novel experience for Sonnenberg, who was able to trade on the title claim he won from Lewis. And if he chose to work again the next night, as he frequently did, there was five grand more laying around.

Small wonder, then, that Gustave developed an ailment in the region of his heart when, finally, he did meet Londos and split a mere $1,100 gate after expenses were deducted. It was enough to leave him with a broken heart if not actually a bum ticker.

And now for a vastly more pleasant bit of reading:

"Dear Mr. Povich: Nobody disputes that a man or a nation has the right to self-defense. Here is my check for $5 for the Finnish Relief Fund. I can think of no better cause . . . Charles R. Bartlett."

In Sunday's Post Shirley Povich will review the most thrilling sports events of the past year.

With CONSIDINE

New York, Dec. 29.—Departmenting the news:

Gallop Poll.—With all due respect for the endurance records of Lou Gehrig, Ching Johnson and other cast-iron gents, the Iron Man of Iron Men is Dude Foden. Dude Foden is a jockey. He has just officially concluded his twenty-seventh year of racing. He is 53 years old and had 229 mounts during the season, with 31 firsts, 43 seconds and 25 thirds. He won $22,352, which is nearly $22,000 more than he won when he was nice and fresh, back in 1912.

CONSIDINE

The Morning Telegraph gave the old boy a good send-off today, listing his incredible record. He was born in Toronto in 1887 and is generally credited with 27 years of racing. There are many old-timers, however, who say he has been riding nearly 40 years. The records, kept on him since 1912, show that he has had 5,901 mounts and 930 winners, and won a total of $572,750.

Dempsey's Pool Immortalizes 'Long Count'

Silver Lining Division—Gene Tunney is expected to be the guest of honor when Jack Dempsey dedicates the Tex Rickard Memorial Pool at the Dempsey-Vanderbilt Hotel in Miami Beach. The entrance to the pool, which hereby gets a free plug, is called the "Million Dollar Gate" and the 13 cabanas around its chlorine banks are called the "Long Count Cabana Club."

It all brings to mind the incredible good fortune Dempsey had in losing to Tunney the way he did. Without that always questionable long count at Chicago he might have disappeared from public view as just another beaten champion. But America's fierce sympathy for persons wronged, and the fine way in which Dempsey took his setback, made the Mauler greater in defeat than he had ever been in victory. Today he is still "champ" to the country, and it is only fitting that he should have Tunney—the man who was good enough and (as it turned out) kind enough to lick him—at his side when he dedicates a pool to the memory of the man who made them both.

Little Bright Eyes Gifted With Money

Finance—Uncle Sam's favorite sports performer is not Don Budge, who made $75,000 this year, or Joe DiMaggio or any other high salaried person who might come to mind. It's a she, and she is Sonja Henie.

Little Bright Eyes has a stunning ability for making money. With the possible exception of Paavo Nurmi, she made more dough as an amateur than any athlete in history. As a pro she worked for a straight 50 per cent of the gross before sell-out houses. She gets about $100,000 per movie. Her annual Hollywood Ice Revue, now on tour, will net her some staggering sum—for it is appealing not only to ice skate enthusiasts but to that tremendous congregation of movie worshippers.

Sonja should make about a half a million bucks this year—some of which Uncle Sam and King Haakon will actually let her keep.

Pro Football's Complex Crops Up Again

Neurosis Ward—The strange fits of inferiority complex which hit professional football are reflected in the game the boys have scheduled for January 7 in Los Angeles. It is the only post-season game which champion Green Bay Packers will be permitted to play, and their opponents will be a fabulous All-Star pro team, coached by Steve Owen.

But the boys, who have taken the East and Midwest by storm, are almost apologetic in their approach on the California football populace. They have hired a stadium which has to be enlarged to seat 20,000, and they are going about their preparations for the game as if they didn't know that it will be twice as well played and twice as exciting as anything the semipros in the Rose Bowl could produce.

2,700 Watch Locals Trail Throughout

Hal Dewey's Three Goals Are Futile As Canadians Play Brilliant Hockey

Outskated, outpassed and outshot, the Washington Eagles went down to an 8-4 defeat at Riverside Stadium last night. The Montreal Royals, showing some of the best hockey seen in Washington, held the lead through a cleanly played and fast game. A crowd of 2,700 watched the action.

The Canadians ran up a 3-0 advantage before the Eagles could score. They finished the game in whirlwind style, having an 8-3 lead at one stage of the final period.

Montreal scored a goal that looked mighty big after 2 minutes 20 seconds of the first period. Marcel Raymond, skating in a fashion best described by his first name, broke through Davies and Burrage to shove the thing into the net. For the next 13 minutes there was much action but no scoring. Hal Dewey missed the best scoring chance when he shot one from close range that was barely saved. The Royals made their second score after 15 minutes 17 seconds. This time Jim Haggerty took a pass from Murray to score. A few seconds later Perronne received a short pass from Murray to make it 3 to 0, Montreal.

In the closing minute of play Mike Germann pounded in the first score for the Eagles on a pass from Courteau. The second period was more than 3 minutes old before Hal Dewey brought the crowd to its feet with a side shot. The rivals battled along for 9 minutes before Haggerty scored for Montreal to make it 4 to 2.

The Eagles missed several good opportunities to cut down the lead and then the Royals scored twice in quick succession, Perronne and O'Connor causing the red light to shine. With a minute to go, Hal Dewey, on a pass from Courteau, shoved in a point to cut the Montreal lead to 6-3.

Raymond scored his second goal a minute after the start of the third period. With McConnell aiding, he worked the thing in and slapped it past Goalie Lee to increase the Royal's lead to 7-3.

The Eagles' attack failed to connect as the visitors concentrated on defensive tactics. Peronne boosted the Royals' lead to 8-3 with 7 minutes left to play. Then Dewey came back with his third score of the game on assists from Covert and Davies and the count was 8-4.

O'Brien Leads Reds Against Brewers

Former G. W. Cageman Comes Home Tomorrow For League Clash

Tommy O'Brien, captain and outstanding star of George Washington University's great basketball team of two years ago, returned to the National Capital an outstanding American Basketball League star tomorrow afternoon when he joins the celebrated Jersey Reds in their 2:30 o'clock stand against Mack Posnack's Washington Heurich Brewers.

O'Brien, used mainly as a substitute for the greatest part of last season, established himself as an outstanding American League star in the championship playoff series when his spectacular scoring and floor play sparked the Jersey Reds to several upsets and into the final championship round.

O'Brien in his basketball days at George Washington was hailed as the most popular athlete the Colonials had turned out since Tuffy Leemans and his return to Washington as an American League standout tomorrow afternoon is expected to attract hosts of George Washington University students, alumni and admirers.

The surprising Brewers, runner-up to the American Basketball League leading Sphas, recently upset the Original Renaissance Club, claimants of the world professional championship, and have twice upset the powerful Baltimore Clippers and routed the New York Rovers in recent appearances.

4 Favorites Win in Sugar Bowl Matches

Grant, Riggs, Cooke, McNeill Advance to Semifinal Round

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Dec. 29.—The four seeded players—Bobby Riggs, Don McNeill, Elwood Cooke and Bryan (Bitsy) Grant—came through as expected in the Sugar Bowl tennis tournament today and gained the semifinal round.

McNeill, America's third-ranking player from Oklahoma City, overcame Charles Hare, No. 1 player of England, who has only about three months more of tennis to enjoy in this country before his "class" is called up and he has to go home to swap his racket for a rifle. The score was 6—1, 7—5.

Riggs, who calls Chicago his home and was the country's top-ranked player in 1939, continued the loafing habit he indulges when he deems his foeman not worthy of his steel, and scored over Jack Bushman, of Louisiana State University, by only 8—6, 8—6.

Grant, little Atlantan, who won the tourney last year, had a hard time in the first set but finished in fine fashion to subdue Edward Alloo, of Berkeley, Calif., 10—8, 6—3.

Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., was in command all the way in his match with Billy Gillespie, of Miami, and won easily, 6—1, 6—3.

Tomorrow afternoon McNeill and Grant meet in the upper bracket while Riggs and Cooke tangle. The finals will be played Sunday morning.

Colonials Set for Real Battle With Florida Quintet Tonight

LOU VELTRI

G. W. Line-Up Is Shifted for Game At Tech High Gym

Swinging back into action after a brief holiday rest, George Washington University's basketball team tonight tackles the University of Florida in its fifth straight home engagement at Tech High Gym.

This is the first of four important local games for the Colonials, who had hard going in the early games, but who are expected to function smoothly when the younger players get more seasoning. Of particular importance on the Colonials' immediate schedule is their game with Georgetown next Saturday night.

G. W. Ready for 'Gators

Coach Bill Reinhart feels that the G. W. squad needs work and for the past four days the boys in Buff have drilled diligently to get back into harness for Florida.

The 'Gators were not impressive earlier in the week when they lost to Washington College in Baltimore. But Reinhart scouted them in that game and believes they can trouble G. W., particularly with Steve Elish, their 6-foot-5-inch center.

Line-Up Changed

Reinhart has shifted the Colonials considerably in scrimmages with Gonzaga Prep the past two days and there probably will be several changes in the starting five tonight. Lou Veltri, the fleet little guard, has begun to hit his stride and will start in place of Eddie Amendola or Bobby Gilham.

Both Charley Jones, 6-foot-4-inch center, and Roy McNeil, a Roosevelt High graduate, are showing great improvement also.

The G. W. frosh will meet Central High in a preliminary game tonight at 7 o'clock. The varsity game starts at 8:30.

10,000 Await Blue and Gray Battle Today

Both Sides Confident As Teams Mark Time For Alabama Classic

By the Associated Press

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 29.—Sectional rivalry conceived in war's bitterness and revived in peaceful sportsmanship will be renewed here tomorrow in the second annual Blue-Gray football game between college stars of North and South.

Mayor W. A. Gunter, whose city administration sponsors the game and turns profits to charity, predicted upward of 10,000 would turn out in clear, cold weather after a morning of parade and pageantry.

Coaches Lynn Waldorf, of Northwestern, and Carl Snavely, of Cornell, viewed their 1939 Yankee club as "speedier, more versatile and better balanced" than that with which they turned back the rebels 7 to 0 a year ago.

Ray Morrison, of Vanderbilt, and Josh Cody, of Florida, skipped a flat prediction, but Morrison said: "If a break comes our way, watch out!"

Whether Paul Shu, pounding V. M. I. back, would be able to start still was a question, but Bern Sweeney, Columbia guard, who suffered a bruised leg two days ago, was listed as a blue starter.

The youngsters will be cheered on by men now commanding the remnants of opposing armies of the 1860's. Gen. John E. Andrews, Quincy, Ill., commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, and Gen. J. F. Howell, Bristol, Va., head of the United Confederate Veterans, clasped hands this afternoon across a wreath the former placed on a Confederate monument.

| North. | Position. | South. |
|---|---|---|
| Grefe (N.W.) | L.E. | Baur (L.S.U.) |
| Cutlich (N.W.) | L.T. | Goff (Fla.) |
| Marino (O.St.) | L.G. | Johnson (Ga.) |
| Lenich (Ill.) | Center | Cox (Ala.) |
| Sweeney (Col.) | R.G. | Howell (Aub.) |
| Savilla (Mich.) | R.T. | Linden (Ky.) |
| Tomasello (Scr.) | Q.B. | Andrus (Vandy) |
| Hutchinson (Da.) | L.H. | Heineman (T.M.) |
| Zadworney (O.S.) | R.H. | Nix (Miss.St.) |
| Principe (Fm) | F.B. | Shetley (Pur.) |

Referee—Thomason (Georgia). Umpire—Pitts (Auburn). Field Judge—Paterson (Auburn). Linesman—Severence (Oberlin).

May Appear in Games

Manila, Dec. 29 (U.P.).—Six members of the assembly today filed a bill for appropriation of 50,000 pesos to permit Philippine participation in the Pan-American Olympic Games at Buenos Aires.

The Philippine Amateur Athletic Federation has accepted an invitation to participate.

New Policy Is Adopted By Officials

Members Must Hew to Straight and Narrow Or Be Fined Under New Rule Set-Up

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Dec. 29 (AP).—The National Collegiate Athletic Association, after muddling through 33 years of administrative activity by the sidedoor method of educative principles, is ready to adopt the "big stick" policy of the late Teddy Roosevelt.

Its December bulletin prepares the way for a new program which will permit infliction of penalties of drastic consequence on erring colleges and universities.

In other words, the N. C. A. A. has ordered itself a set of boxing gloves instead of another pair of mittins. Will the deal go through? Will the association commit itself to a "put up or shut up" policy to schools which flit on the borderline of semiprofessionalism in athletes?

Cure Is Outlined

Stick around and find out. Prof. William B. Owens, of Stanford University, president of the association, referred today to his recent report in which he outlined a possible cure for such evils. In effect, it was a policy of having good members declining to compete with those who fail to live up to the code.

The association's aims, in part, were framed as follows:

"No athlete shall receive aid other than payment for legitimate employment from athletic funds directly or indirectly.

"An athlete shall be required in employment to give full and honest return for any pay received.

"The membership of any member failing to maintain acceptable scholastic or athletic standards may be terminated by the vote of two-thirds of the delegates present at an annual convention . . ."

Hold Joint Session

The N. C. A. A. group held a joint session today with members of the American Football Coaches Association. The subject of discussion was the function of national associations in intercollegiate athletics. It paved the way for action tomorrow in which the faculty men are expected to approve of their new proposed administrative policy.

Speakers included Prof. Owens, Thurston J. Davies, president of Colorado College, and Lou Little, head of the coaches association.

Dr. Marvin A. Stevens, of New York University, and Floyd Eastwood, of Purdue, submitted a committee report which disclosed fewer gridiron injuries this year than last.

Don Faurot Reported Set For Coast Job

By the Associated Press

St. Joseph, Mo., Dec. 29.—The report that Don Faurot, University of Missouri football coach, has agreed to become head coach at Stanford for $8,500 a year was published today by the St. Joseph Gazette as coming from "usually reliable sources."

The Gazette said the agreement, now oral while Faurot negotiates for a five-year contract with a sliding wage scale, will be announced after Missouri plays its Orange Bowl game against Georgia Tech at Miami, Fla., New Year's Day.

Faurot's Missouri contract, calling for $6,000 a year, expires Sunday. Tiny Thornhill, present Stanford mentor, was told recently his contract would not be renewed.

C. U. Bowl Train Strikes Motorist; He Apologizes

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fort Worth, Tex., Dec. 29.—Found—a rival to Caspar Milquetoast and the world's luckiest man.

Last night the Sunshine Special, carrying the Catholic University football squad to the Sun Bowl, came to a quick and grinding stop near Willow Spring, Tex. The speeding special had struck an automobile.

Frightened, the engineer piled out o fhis cab and joined the brakeman in rushing to the scene. They expected to find dead bodies and a pile of twisted wreckage of a car.

Instead, the automobile was but slightly damaged and its occupant not at all shattered of nerve. And he was terribly apologetic.

"I am awfully sorry," he began. "Hope I didn't hurt your engine. It was all my fault, and if you'll forget it, I'll pay for my own damage."

After the engineer and brakeman informed him he had not in the least hurt their train, the man explained that he was just driving along, with the windows up and didn't see or hear the onrushing train until it was bearing down on him.

Royal Blue Wins TropicalFeature Race on Heavy Track

Arcaro Rides Both Ends of Daily Double

Floragina Second, Sungino Third in Outstanding Event; Hat Check Winner

By the Associated Press

Tropical Park, Fla., Dec. 29.—Showing extreme fondness for the chunky, heavy track which prevailed following an overnight deluge, C. W. Pershall's Royal Blue ran away from four rivals in the 6-furlong Palm Beach Purse here this afternoon. The 4-year-old son of Blue Larkspur, a poor fourth in the Christmas Day feature, breezed to the wire three lengths in front of E. C. Roth's Floragina, while the latter nosed out Mrs. C. S. Bromley's Sungino.

The two choices—Warren Wright's Count Morse and J. P. McConnell's Double B.—brought up the rear, Count Morse, away from competition since last February, was most in demand. The veteran could not get to the front, although he made a menacing move leaving the back stretch, Double B., after a fast start, dropped back and may not have liked the tough going.

Royal Blue, piloted by Irving Anderson, needed 1:15 1-5 to reach the finish line. He paid $8.50 for $2.

Rated close behind Floragina for a half-mile, Royal Blue then asserted his superiority, spurting into a commanding advantage for an easy triumph. Sungino came through on the rail at the final turn and just missed in his try for the place position.

Favorite Scorers

Bright and Early, a 6-year-old gelding, got the favorite players off to a bright and early start for the day when he galloped home with the opening event to pay $3.50 for $2. Breaking alertly under Eddie Arcaro, the son of Golden Broom drew well clear and reported three lengths to the good. He completed the six furlongs in 1:15 1-5. Penabud was up in time to head Orient Express.

Eddie Arcaro accounted for both ends of the $16.60 daily double when he managed to keep the favored Hat Check going long enough to win the second dash by a half length. Morning Mail was an easy second, five lengths in advance of Wise Decision. The latter dashed into a narrow lead from his inside position. He was replaced in the van by Hat Check near the far turn. The latter drew clear but was driving hard at the end to pay $8.20.

Seed Wins Another

It was three out of four for the talent when Seed scored his second straight triumph of the meeting in the fourth race of a mile and 70 yards. The Chestnut Oak colt allowed Maebeau to make the running for a half mile, then responded to Jimmy Ashcroft's mild urging and drew into a long lead. The $5.30-for-$2 chance clicked by four lengths. Your Buddy was a forward running second, two lengths better than Scrappy Miss.

Charlie Durando drove the 4-to-1 shot, Beau Insco, to a neck victory over Pari Call in the mile and a sixteenth of the third contest, but the second jockey, Porter Roberts, claimed a foul against the victor, and the stewards deliberated at length before allowing the original result to stand. Beau Insco held a daylight lead rounding out of the back stretch, then Pari Call loomed alongside of him at the home turn. The pair bumped there and again in the stretch, but the officials apparently thought Beau Insco was not entirely to blame.

Santa Anita Opens Sixth Meet Today

$10,000 Feature for California-Breds of 2-Year-Old Variety

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Dec. 29.—Clear skies and 40,000 enthusiastic turf fans are expected to attend the opening tomorrow of Santa Anita race track's sixth winter meeting.

California-bred 2-year-olds hold down the feature position. They will run in the California Breeders Championship at 1 mile for a $10,000 added purse. The "big name" horses of the stake division go into action Monday in the New Year's Day Handicap for $10,000 prize money.

Sixteen juveniles were named to go postward in the Breeders Championship. Heading the array were the Circle M entry, Red Chip, brought to the Coast from Florida for the race; Neil S. McCarthy's Big Ben, son of the once famous Tick On, and F. S. Trumbull's The Fop.

Leading jockeys of the turf sport were on hand. Basil James was signed to ride Red Chip, Maurice Peters took The Fop, and Jack Westrope drew Allergic, owned by the R. S. R. Ranch.

Scheduled to go in the Monday feature were such stars as Charles S. Howard's Kalak II, winner of the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap; Maj. Austin C. Taylor's Whichcee, and A. A. Baroni's Specify.

Blair Five Continues March, Swamping Harpers Ferry, 50-5

Losers Fail To Get Single Field Goal

Nick Carter Is Hero Of One-Sided Game, Counting 18 Points; Reynolds Is Second

Montgomery Blair High's cage offense and defense clicked to near-perfection last night on the home court as the suburban cagemen held Harpers Ferry High to exactly no field goals and ground out a 50-5 victory.

The only points registered by the invaders were on foul shots, three in the first half and two in the second. It was the home team's fourth consecutive triumph since the start of the season, bringing its scoring total to 163 points.

Nick Carter, fleet young forward, provided the bulk of point-making with 18 markers, eight more than the total of the next best man, "Wimpy" Reynolds. Johnny Norris also ranked high for the winners with nine points. In all, 11 players were sent into the walk-away by Coach Cres Bride, and six of them took a hand in the scoring.

At halftime, despite numerous but futile attempts of the guests to crack Blair's air-tight defense, the count was 23-3, and Blair was content to slightly more than double that in the closing periods. Forward Nickols was high-point man for the losers, his two fouls giving him the honor. Single shots by Noland, Davison and Zobro completed the scoring.

A large crowd sat in on the game, and instead of cheering Blair to victory screamed in the closing minutes for it to keep Harpers Ferry from scoring a basket. Next opponent for Blair will be McKinley High, which it engages Wednesday on the Tech court at 8 p. m.

Georgia Tech Sent Through Hard Drill

Miami, Fla., Dec. 29.—While the Missouri football squad blithely enjoyed a day off after ending its serious training, Georgia Tech's Engineers pounded away on the practice field today to reach fighting trim for Monday's Orange Bowl game.

Coach Bill Alexander of Tech not only sent the Atlantans again and again through their full repertoire of hocus-pocus but he had the linemen do two-on-one blocking and push the heavy charging sled around.

There's no mistake about one thing—if Tech doesn't win this game it won't be because the team isn't in condition. Alexander scheduled a lighter workout tomorrow and a windup signal drill on the stadium sod Sunday.

Johnny Bosch, Tech's little spark-plug, and his understudy, Bobby Pair, continued to hit the targets with zippy passes. Despite the warm weather, the Engineers showed an extraordinary amount of ginger.

Alexander, who has professed a healthy respect for Pitchin' Paul Christman, of Missouri, devoted a considerable portion of the workout to pass defense.

Bobby Dodd, Tech backfield coach, appeared pleased with the squad's attitude.

"It looks like they've decided they're going to play a football game New Year's Day," he grinned.

Frivolity attending the Orange Bowl festivities reached a higher pitch, meanwhile, as the Shriners took over for a parade and tomfoolery. They burlesqued a session of the city commission, had luncheon on the courthouse steps, and staged a bridge game in the middle of Flagler street, with some 200 kibitzers.

League Head To Summon Ernie Savard

By the Associated Press

Montreal, Dec. 29.—President Frank Calder, of the National Hockey League, said today that Ernie Savard, president of the Montreal Canadiens, will be summoned to explain his actions during an argument with Referee Frank (King) Clancy last night.

Savard, after Clancy disallowed a Canadiens' goal in a game against the Toronto Maple Leafs here, seized and shook the official in a subsequent sideline discussion. The Leafs won the game, 6 to 4.

"Savard is not a player, he is a president of a club," Calder said. "Before penalizing a man in his position he must be given an ample opportunity to justify his actions."

In an interview, Savard said today he would offer no defense concerning his actions.

"I figure King Clancy is a good referee and I have nothing against the man," he said. "The only thing is that I believe he had a bad night when the Leafs were here and we were the victims."

combination. To say the Cards were sorry to leave would be an understatement.

Arriving here at 11 o'clock, about 30 minutes late because of an accident last night, the Cards were hustled into a bus and out to Texas Christian University Stadium, where they engaged in their first outdoor workout since leaving Washington Wednesday.

The drill lasted only about 45 minutes but it was brisk and satisfactory to Head Coach Dutch Bergman.

Especially were the onlookers impressed with the punting of Pete Sachon and Charley Moutenot, who were booting consistently for 50, 60 and sometimes 70 yards. The speed with which Louis Shine and Joe Carrig, C. U.'s crack ends, were covering the punts also drew astonished stares.

Since Texas is the hotbed of great college passers, having produced Sammy Baugh and Dave O'Brien to name just two, we were interested to know what the folks thought about the C. U. leather throwers.

"Catholic has nice pass plays and plenty of guys to make them click," remarked Amos Milton, of the Star-Telegram expressing the sentiment of the sports writers.

Milton was speaking chiefly of Frank Krawzel, Johnny Fiorellino and Charley Moutenot were doing the bulk of the passing. Shine, who had been a doubtful starter against Arizona State Teachers because of an old knee injury, looked fiine.

After practice the squad was rushed to the Texas Hotel for the luncheon.

Toastmaster was Frank Crumley, a Georgetown University graduate of 1931. Other prominent guests inclued Mayor T. J. Harrell, of Fort Worth; Dr. James L. Murphy, Grand Knight of the Knights of Columbus; Dr. E. M. Waits, T. C. U. president, and James O'Connell, former great C. U. football player.

We purposely omitted the name of Amon Carter from the above list, for that grand friend of college football deserves a special paragraph.

Too modest to sit at the head table with guests less distinguished, the multi-millionaire newspaper owner, ail magnate and friend of Presidents, was recognized by Coach Bergman, who got out a new football and had every member of his squad autograph it and this he presented to Carter as a climax of the luncheon.

Not to be outdone, Carter promptly brought forth one of his famous 10-gallon hats for Bergman.

Later Carter took the three Washington newspapermen making the trip to a haberdashery and outfitted them.

When the luncheon was finished the C. U. party immediately boarded their special and headed for El Paso, little more than 600 miles from Fort Worth.

C. U. to Get Western Welcome at El Paso

El Paso, Tex., Dec. 29 (AP).—An old-fashioned Western welcome awaits the arrival of Catholic University's Sun Bowl-bound gridiron eleven.

The Cardinals are due at the crack of dawn, but not too early for a welcoming delegation of cowboy-garbed, pistol toting Rancheros—a cowboy organization devoted to fancy shirts and spotted ponys.

An old stage coach of the '80s will be used to transport the Washington gridders from the railroad station to their quarters.

The Cardinals' opponents in the Sun Bowl Monday, the Arizona State Bulldogs of Tempe, are not due until Sunday morning.

First Section of Vol Backers, 500 Strong, Reaches Pasadena

Coonskin Caps, High Spirits Featured By Fans of South's Rose Bowl Contender

By the Associated Press

Pasadena, Calif., Dec. 29.—Five hundred shouting rooters rolled in today to help the Tennessee cause in the Rose Bowl football game against the University of California.

Attired in traditional Tennessee coonskin caps and heavy wraps, the arriving delegation promptly set up a chant for victory in the New Year's Day grid attraction.

Scores swarmed from the Los Angeles station to Pasadena, hoping for a peep at their heroes, but the Volunteer team remained in seclusion at its Pasadena hotel.

Hundreds of additional supporters are en route by plane, train and automobile, all pledged to help their vaunted Vols attain a record of never a loss nor a tie on 24 consecutive games.

The Tennessee rooting section in the Bowl, augmented by former residents of the State who live in California, will number around 5,000.

Southern California's football squad, meanwhile, took up quarters in Pasadena near the famous Rose Bowl itself, but journeyed back to the S. C. campus in Los Angeles for an afternoon workout.

The official Tennessee party, headed by Maj. Bob Neyland, the coach, joined with Coach Howard Jones and his staff at the annual "kick-off" luncheon in Pasadena's Civic Center Auditorium.

General predictions on the outcome of the game continue to keep Southern California in the favor's role, but the edge grows slimmer as new Tennessee backers arrive. The home folks simply refuse to believe there is a team that can down their outfit.

MIRIAM KREINSON

Bradford, Pa., Girl Merely Taught Dancing To Improve Gracefulness of Schoolboy Team

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 29.—The Bradford (Pa.) High School football team has been the victim of a vicious whispering campaign.

Under the able direction of an astute publicity agent, Miriam Kreinson, a Bradford dancing teacher, was introduced to New York as "the only lady football coach in the world."

That was news this dull holiday season—as witness a number of stories that appeared in the local journals, telling how Coach Kreinson taught her gridders to mouse-trap an opposing tackle. Why she favored the double-wingback style of offense and what she thought of George Cafego's chances of playing in the Rose Bowl.

Matter of fact, Miss Kreinson doesn't know a thing about football. And the Bradford Owls are not coached by her. She said so herself today in the midst of celebrating her twenty-third brithday here.

"All I do is teach the backfield players ballet dancing to increase their effectiveness as football players," she said. "I don't know anything about coaching a team. Why, I don't even know who is playing in the Rose Bowl."

The bruising Bradford backs objected strongly to an hour's ballet instruction a day as a help toward making bigger and better downs, but Head Coach Bob Pfleug made 'em take dancing lessons—and like 'em, she recalled.

And Miss Kreinson says it has helped, because, she points out, the Owls are undefeated in their last 20 games, and she has been teaching them for the last two years.

She said she thought ballet dancing gave the players much better control of their bodies and made better kickers of them, and that her proteges were "certainly more graceful than the boys on other teams."

Aggie, Tulane Coaches Evade Bowl Queries

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Dec. 29.—The Monday morning quarterbacks went into a huddle today with the Texas A. and M. and Tulane coaches, anxious to perfect their strategy for the New Year's Day Sugar Bowl classic, but in the end everyone agreed the game would have to be played to answer all the doubtful questions.

Mostly facetious replies came from Coaches Homer Norton of the Texas Aggies and Lowell (Red) Dawson of the Tulane Green Wave to a volley of straightforward questions fired at them.

The result of the gathering, attended by many of the athletes participating in other Sugar Bowl events, was that the two undefeated football teams would be primed for conquest before a record Southern crowd of 70,000 in Tulane Stadium on Monday afternoon.

Aggies Roll In

Shortly before 8 a. m. today the Aggies, 52 strong and in near top physical condition, rolled into New Orleans aboard a special train. After breakfast at a hotel, the team continued on to the Gulf coast resort city of Biloxi, Miss., to remain until a few hours before game time. Norton and four players, among them All-America John Kimbrough, stayed here for luncheon.

To a questioner wishing to know Texas A. and M.'s greatest threat, Norton replied "Punt, pass and kick," and when asked whether he thought both teams would score, the Aggie chieftain said he thought Tulane would not only score, "but score, score and score."

"Those little boys from Texas A. and M.," he said, "won't be able to do much with that big Tulane line. I hope Tulane doesn't treat us too roughly, for we're a long way from home and the boys are kinda nervous and jittery. But we'll pop heads with them and do the best we can."

Dawson Full of Gloom

One question fired at Dawson was "Just how gloomy are you?—lukewarm, medium or full," to which the young Tulane skipper exclaimed "full" without hesitation. Dawson was asked his opinion of the score. He produced a letter he received from Texas, which said Tulane was "big and dumb" and would lose by 20 to 0. "That answers that one," he added.

From all angles, the teams shaped up nearly even for the sixth Sugar Bowl game, starting at 1:15 p. m., Central time. The betting odds, however, favored the Aggies at 7 to 10, but little money was being placed. Tulane was even money to defeat the Nation's No. 1 team.

Navy's Regulation On Boys' Height Pain to Cage Coach

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Dec. 29.—Pass the crying towel to Johnnie Wilson, Navy basketball coach. He really has a moan coming, because Navy regulations forbid using players more than 6 feet 4 inches tall.

While other coaches scour the hinterlands for human storks towering 6 feet 7 and up, Wilson has to get along with relative basketball pygmies because no boy more than 6 feet 4 can enter the academy.

It was explained that low transoms on ships and other standard equipment in the Navy bar the ambling Alps over 6 feet 4.

Tallest player on hte Navy squad is Charlies Smith, of Baltimore, 6 feet 3.

With Hymie Perlo leading the attack with 14 points, Roosevelt High School varsity five handed the alumni a 38-27 drubbing last night in their annual game at the Riders' gym.

At the intermission the varsity led 14-13. Center Ernest Travis accounted for nine of Roosevelt's points and also played a polished floor game.

G. Coakley led the scoring for the alumni with eight points. Coach Tony Prisciopta of the alumni substituted freely in the second half, 16 men seeing action.

'Cissy' Madden Retains Girls' Indoor Crown

Katherine Hubbel Is Beaten in Finals of Chestnut Hill Meet

By the United Press.

Chestnut Hill, Mass., Dec. 29.—Marguerita (Cissy) Madden, of Jamaica, successfully defended her national girls' indoor tennis championship when she trounced Katherine Hubbel, of Dedham, 6—1, 6—1, in the final on Longwood Cricket Club's covered courts today.

With two more years of girls' competition, Miss Madden now threatens the record of Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Fabyan, who won three championships in that division. Only four players, including Miss Madden, have gained the title twice.

Scoring frequently with her favorite cross-corner shots from the baseline and playing under wraps, the 16-year-old amateur ice skater easily demonstrated her superiority over the second-seeded Miss Hubbell to win her second girls' title.

In the doubles final Miss Madden paired with Dorothy Wightman, of Brookline, to gain further honors by defeating Miss Hubbell and Kayel Rogers, of Westfield, N. J., 6—2, 6—4. It was the fourth straight year that Miss Wightman has shared the national girls' indoor doubles title, equaling another of Mrs. Fabyan's records.

Record Coin Output Sign of Prosperity

Philadelphia, Dec. 29 (AP).—The Philadelphia Mint has produced a record number of coins in the past three months, and that, said Superintendent Edwin H. Dressel today, means business conditions are improving. "The demands of banks for new coins is one of the best barometers of business," Dressel said.

Dressel said the mint has been operated 24 hours a day, seven days a week for several months. Production records since September show: September, 88,983,000 coins valued at $3,709,690; October, 104,428,519 valued at $4,161,397; November, 105,109,000 valued at $3,959,750; December (up to today) 84,93[illegible],387 valued at $3,004,231.

Profit-Taking Erases Early Wheat Gains

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 29.—Early gains of 1-1½ cents a bushel in the wheat pit induced by a low semi-official estimate of the Argentine crop were canceled or reduced in late trading today.

Mill buying in connection with increased flour purchasing also contributed to the temporary advance, which carried May cantracts up to $1.04⅞ and July to $1.01⅝. Profit taking appeared toward the close, however, and final prices were unchanged to ⅝ higher compared with yesterday, May, 1.03¼@1.03⅜; July, 1.00¼@1.00⅜.

Corn closed unchanged to ⅜ lower, May, 58½; July 59; oats unchanged to ¼ up; soy beans, 1¾@2 lower; rye, ¾@⅞ down, and lard, 2-5 lower.

Announcement that the Government's wheat and flour export subsidy program would be suspended except for Northwest flour shipments to the Philippines attracted attention but apparently had little market effect inasmuch as this action was expected. The subsidy program has been operated on a very small scale since the war began and traders said the spreading Southwestern drought and the fact that domestic prices were well above world levels made its operation both unnecessary and difficult.

American Security Club Celebrates Bank Jubilee

The members and guests of the Security Club, of the American Security & Trust Co., enjoyed a post-Cmhristmas and pre-New Year card party and dance last night at the Hotel 2400, in celebration of the company's completion of 50 years' banking and trust service in Washington. Employes from the main office and four branches with their families and friends participated.

Daniel J. Murphy, president of the club, and Robert Talley, social chairman, were in charge of the affair. The same group has an athletic party and several social gatherings scheduled for early January.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 29.—The stock market weathered the chilling effect of year-end adjustments and continued to advance today. Textile issues were in good demand and several speculative industrials attracted support. Interest in domestic rails carried through to the close. British government bonds inched ahead and a liberal sprinkling of gains dotted foreign bonds. Most commodity stocks, notably oils, also improved.

Paris.—Although opening gains were not fully maintained in the bourse today, the market closed on a steady footing. Suez Canal, Bank of France and Canadian Pacific ended slightly higher.

Amsterdam.—A little irregularity crept into bourse price fluctuations near the close today. American issues made the best showing.

Liverpool.—Cotton futures ended 10 to 12 points ahead. Scattered buying reflected firmness of overseas markets.

Cold Starts Buying Wave In Clothing

Sales of Heavy Apparel Offset Usual Drop After Christmas

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—The usual post-Christmas decline in retail buying was cushioned this week by active and unexpected demand for heavy apparel, Dun & Bradstreet said today in a weekly survey.

Despite the drop from the preceding week, retail distribution outstripped the similar 1938 week by 2 to 6 per cent for the country as a whole, the agency estimated. The cold wave that swept out of the West to the Atlantic Seaboard sent consumers scurrying for long deferred heavy clothing needs.

"Winter wearing apparel moved out at the fastest rate this month in most of the leading centers of distribution.

"Demand was especially strong for trimmed and untrimmed coats, fur garments, overcoats, men's suits, and children's clothing.

"Few store-wide clearances were in progress . . . on many offerings mark-downs were small, as holdings were light."

The survey said the drought-stricken agricultural districts, and some centers of the Southwest and Pacific Coast, showed the largest lags in buying.

Paul F. Warburg New Partner in J. S. Bache & Co

New York, Dec. 29.—As of January 1 Paul Felix Warburg, son of the late Felix M. Warburg, will become a general partner in the firm of J. S. Bache & Co. Felix M. Warburg, Mr. Warburg's father, was, at the time of his death, the senior partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. His uncle, the late Paul M. ## New Financing Drops Off in Week

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Flotation of new securities dropped off sharply during the week ended yesterday, totaling only $21,055,749, the smallest amount in seven weeks, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today. Registration tangles slowed up some issues in reaching the market.

About 50 per cent of the new securities were to obtain new money; the remainder represented the refunding of existing debt.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Dec. 29 (AP) (United States Department of Agriculture).—Domestic wools were mostly very slow on the Boston market today. The few inquiries being received were largely for Merino wools of foreign origin. A few sales were being closed on spot South African Merino wools at steady prices and an occasional order was being placed for Merino wools to be imported from Australia and South America. Quotations on domestic wools were unchanged, compared with prices quoted earlier in the week, but they were largely nominal because of the lack of trading.

Steady, Low-Priced Shares in Demand Volume Holds Above Million Mark Speculative Issues Lead Bond Advance

New York, Dec. 29.—Security dealings today were a carbon copy of the two previous sessions. Portfolio shifts coupled with some new investment and speculation held volume above the million-share mark for the third successive day. If leadership had been a bit better stocks might have gone ahead faster, but only four of the fifteen most active were above the $20 class. The close found average prices less than one-third of a point plus. Stores were the best. Bonds were firm all round with speculatives gaining sharply in spots.

Sterling, French and Belgian francs and Dutch guilders firmed a bit in terms of dollar exchange. Wheat receded from early highs to end unchanged to ⅝ cent up, while cotton was a point down to 17 higher.

10,000-Share Block

Best prices for shares were, in most instances, recorded in the morning while the busiest period of the market was in the final hour when 320,000 shares changed hands. An early feature was Nash-Kelvinator, which came out on a 10,000-share block at a small gain. Large volume distinguished dealings in aircraft issues with United Air Lines, Lockheed and Curtiss-Wright prominent. United, Lockheed, Pan American Airways, American Air Lines and Eastern Air Lines were at new highs. Other issues to establish new tops included Hazel-Atlas Glass, Jewel Tea and Martin-Parry. Standard Brands and Commercial Solvents were first and second, respectively, as market leaders, both with substantial gains.

The recognized market leaders were for the most part quiet but steady with steels, motors, rails and utilities holding fractional advances. Over the whole list advances outnumbered declines by approximately 2 to 1. Sears Roebuck was up a point in a strong merchandising section. Du Pont spurted 2⅜. Chesapeake & Ohio, 1¼, and American Can 1½. Steel common and General Motors were about even at the finish.

Comparisons Favorable

Business news continued to reflect the activity of producing and distributing interests in the fourth quarter, and comparisons with a year ago were cheering. Class I railroads reported net operating income for November of $70,345,795 against $49,692,171 in the like 1938 month. Dun's said that the cold weather had generated a large volume of heavy apparel buying that is offsetting the seasonal downpull in retail trade that usually set in after Christmas. Carloadings also held up better than expected in the last week due to coal and coke demand and motor car sales were estimated to be around the highest levels on record for the time of year. Ward's reported U. S. and Canadian assemblies at just under 90,000 units against nearly 118,000 a week ago, the drop being perhaps less than most people had expected.

Commodity Orders From Abroad

In the mean time, the placing of export orders for commodities was interpreted in some quarters as the forerunner of another large buying movement. Norway placed a contract for 10,000 tons of granulated sugar and Holland bought 300,000 bushels of U. S. corn. Great Britain was reported in the market for a large quantity of Canadian wheat. If confirmed, it is the first time in a month that England has shown interest in buying the leading cereal from North American producers. In addition the British are said to be negotiating for a large lot of U. S. lard.

Brokers say that most investors are inclined to hold off until sometime in January for several reasons. Among these are a desire to scrutinize year-end forecasts by industrial and financial leaders; to observe production and consumption trends with particular interest in the inventory position of steel, copper, motor car and other key lines; to get a closer and clearer view of the political situation and the international picture. The gist of a majority of year-end views is that domestic demand can now be easily taken care of, but that continued high production rates will become increasingly dependent on foreign demand, both from countries driven to shift supply sources and for outright war purposes to fighting nations.

Bond Market Firm

Sueculative bonds were in fair demand today in the listed market, with much of the inquiry developing just before the close of the larger advances. The investment section remained steady to firm, with the demand best indicated by the excellent reception of the $60,000,000 Louisville & Nashville issue. Foreign dollar obligations were better, with few exceptions. Trading amounted to $9,690,000.

Treasury obligations were well maintained, while more small gains than losses were noted among highly rated corporate bonds. Rail issues were favorites in the speculative group, both the medium-priced interest-payers and the default bonds moving forward. Local traction bonds attracted some inquiry. The holding company groups did well, as did communications, amusement and other special groups.

Scandinavian bonds turned irregular in the foreign department, but Belgian and Italian bonds advanced. Belligerent issues reflected some uncertainty. Among the Latin-American default bonds Chileans did best, owing to the announced interest payment.

Steel Held Able to Meet Sudden Peace

'Not Necessarily Catastrophic,' Says Iron Age Review

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 29.—Sudden peace in Europe, in the opinion of the magazine Iron Age, "would not necessarily be catastrophic for the American steel industry," but it would tend to improve operative schedules.

The Steel Manufacturing Journal, in a year-end forecast today, asserting that, unless the war should end suddenly, the steel business in 1940 probably should enjoy a steady and fairly good volume.

It predicted that with the continuance of the war, foreign trade would be an important factor in determining whether 1940 would be a good steel year or merely a fair 12 months.

"A sudden ending of the war at some time during 1940," said Iron Age, "would not necessarily be catastrophic for the American steel industry although a few months of hesitation and uncertainty might ensue.

"In considering the prospects for 1940, it seems to be obvious that a prolongation of the record-breaking production of the final quarter of 1939 is not to be expected—at any rate beyond January or February.

Operations at High Rate

"Apart from 1929, when the steel industry operated for eight months at 90 per cent or higher, production of steel at such high rates was never been equaled since the World War for more than one month at a time.

"The consensus seems to be that the first quarter, with a possible average steel output of about 80 per cent, may be the best period of the year. The second quarter is expected to average somewhere from 70 to 75 per cent, and the third quarter about 60 to 65 per cent.

"Beyond that, few are willing even to hazard a guess, so much depending on the turn of events during the year in Europe and in political developments in the United States.

"Assuming that the war continues through 1940, it would seem certain that normal peacetime requirements at home plus such foreign business as may develop will bring an increase in the total steel production for the year of at least 10 per cent over 1939."

Class 1 Railroads 11 Months' Net $526,963,291

Class 1 railroads of the United States in the first 11 months of 1939, had a net railway operating income of $526,963,291 which was at the annual rate of return of 2.18 per cent on their property investment, according to reports just filed by the carriers with the Bureau of Railway Economics of the Association of American Railroads and made public yesterday.

In the first 11 months of 1938 their net railway operating income was $323,781,784 or 1.34 per cent on their property investment, and in the first 11 months of 1930, their net railway operating income was $820,214,052 or 3.38 per cent on property investment.

Property investment is the value of road and equipment as shown by the books of the railways including materials, supplies and cash. The net railway operating income is what is left after the payment of operating expenses, taxes and equipment rentals but before interest and other fixed charges are paid.

This compilation as to earnings for the first 11 months of 1939 is based on reports from 134 Class 1 railroads representing a total of 233,499 miles.

Cotton Closes Higher Despite Hedge Sales

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 29.—Cotton futures waded into a strong wave of hedge selling today and came out just a little wet around the edges. Closing prices were 17 points higher to 2 lower. The July delivery, protected by substantial buying from foreign interests, made the best showing. May was clipped by fairly broad liquidation.

Brokers said the hedging was the most active they had seen in some time. A leading spot house, they noted, sold more than 30,000 bales of March and October cotton. Observers declared this probably represented hedging against spot transactions. Despite this type of pressure, trade interests, New Orleans and Bombay were ready with buying orders. Bombay was an especially active bidder for July.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

In the following five bidding situations you are asked to determine whether the double constitutes a takeout or penalty double. Give reason.

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| (a) South | West | North | East | |
| 1 ♡ | 2 ◇ | Pass | 2 ♠ | |
| Dbl | | | | |
| (b) South | West | North | East | |
| 1 ♡ | Pass | 1 ♠ | Dbl | |
| (c) South | West | North | East | |
| 1 ♣ | 1 ◇ | Dbl | | |
| (d) South | West | North | East | |
| 1 ♡ | Dbl | Redbl | 2 ♣ | |
| Dbl | | | | |
| (e) South | West | North | East | |
| 1 ◇ | Dbl | 3 ◇ | Pass | |
| Pass | Dbl | | | |

ANSWERS—(a) Takeout double. Although it is not South's first opportunity to bid, it is his first opportunity to double. And, since partner has passed, the double cannot be construed as being for penalty.

(b) Takeout double. It is East's first chance to bid. He is asking partner to choose between the two minor suits.

(c) Penalty double. This is a simple example of the double for penalty after partner has opened the bidding. Such doubles as this, at the one or two level bring home the largest penalties.

(d) Penalty double. Since West's double was for a takeout North's redouble is the equivalent of a bid. Hence South's double is for penalty because his partner has already bid.

(e) Takeout double. This is simply a case of repeating a takeout double. Partner is again requested to bid, even though he did not have a free bid over three diamonds.

Collegiate Morals Reported High

New York, Dec. 29 (AP).—Dr. Robert J. Legge, retired health director of the University of California, said yesterday that college students, especially coeds, have high standards of morality and that attacking their morals generally is "like seeing one clergyman intoxicated and accusing the entire clergy of being drunkards."

He told the twentieth annual meeting of the American Student Health Association that of nearly 10,000 California and Minnesota students given the Wasserman test, only 17 were found to be afflicted with syphilis. He said that according to the United States Health Service figures, approximately 10 per cent of the general population has syphilis.

Listen! with Slocum

There's a right gaudy bit of entertainment on your dial at 1,460 tomorrow afternoon at 4:30 when another of the Columbia network's excellent "Pursuit of Happiness" half-hours is unreeled.

Ethel Barrymore

Paul Robeson, one of the world's great voices, will repeat "Ballad for Americans," the original by Earl Robinson and John Latouche. Robeson will have the same chorus behind him that he used November 9 when he first did the "Ballad." The mail and telephone response was so great that the producers of "Pursuit of Happiness" arranged for a repeat.

The business of picking out the afternoon's star is just a little beyond these simple talents. There'll be a pretty fair country actress named Ethel Barrymore on hand, starring in a skit from "America's Growing Pains," by George R. Leighton. Assisting Miss Barrymore will be Clifton Fadiman, the man who has all the answers on the "Information, Please" program.

A new male quartet—no danger of there never being a new male quartet—the Marshalls, will do a little tone poem entitled "Honk, Honk—the Rumble Seat Song."

Burgess Meredith continues as master of ceremonies, Lynn Murray's Chorus will be on hand again, and Mark Warnow will lead his orchestra, which is a fairly curt way to dismiss enough talent for a fine broadcast without the previously mentioned performers.

Thursday evening the folks concerned with the recent "They Need Shoes" campaign brought the drive to a close with a few words of thanks. And well they might, too, because the fund is just a short mashie shot away from $8,000, which in turn is exactly $3,000 more than WJSV and its newspaper partner had hoped to get.

NUTS AND JOLTS

"The DOCTOR" by MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

Chapter 28

HE TOOK off Scott's hand that winter. The hospital always cared for its own, and so Scott was to remain, but he had an assistant now.

"I can do without the hand," he told Chris quietly. "It hasn't been much use lately anyhow. But I'm less than a man now, Chris. That hurts."

He was up and about soon, however, feeding his fish, showing the new stereoscopic plates. "Three dimensions instead of two," he would say. "We'll be showing you fellows the soft tissues soon. Then where's your diagnosis? You'll come to us, and we'll tell you what's the trouble."

Long years later Chris was to remember that stoical resignation of Scott's, and a profit by it.

Katie was making friends at that time, building a life of her own. Rather to Chris's surprise people called, especially the ones in the neighborhood. Some of them were merely curious, but some liked Katie and came again. He would see Olga carrying a tea tray up to the living room, and more than once he found some women around a card table, teaching Katie bridge.

It relieved him, took some of the onus from his own shoulders. But one day he found Doctor Barrett there drinking a highball, and he was aware of sharp annoyance.

"Good liquor you keep, Doctor."

"I don't keep it long!" said Chris, smiling with faint irony.

"Aren't you having any?" said Barrett hospitably.

"Thanks, I don't drink in working hours."

"Thank heaven I'm not a surgeon," said Barrett, and helped himself to another of Chris's cigarettes.

Grant was away all spring, and by summer Chris was a tired shadow of himself. Ted Lawrence, who had become deeply attached to him, protested.

"You're not superhuman," he said. "And you've been doing three men's work all winter. What have you got but your nerves anyhow? You're not a factory! How long is it since you've had a real night's sleep? Look at your hands."

Chris held them out, and they were not steady. "Funny!" he said. "Smoking too much."

"Better get away."

"Get away, with bills all over the place and two rents to pay?"

That was the nearest he had ever come to disloyalty to Katie, that mention of her bills. For Katie was spending money now, upholding her position, talking about buying a car, patronizing beauty shops, and spending hours each day on her dressing. Two maids in the house, one wearing a uniform and cap and opening the door unwillingly to city cases. Candles on the table for dinner, big and still bigger bills at the daily market. And collections poor. Chris sending out his bills like shooting arrows into the air, and times hard. Bread lines in the lower part of town near the river, a few near riots, a deputy sheriff brought into the hospital badly beaten.

Then one hot day in the operating room, closing up after an appendectomy, Chris felt himself go dizzy, as though all the blood had left his head. He finished and went out, to find his legs soft under him and the floor apparently receding.

A week later he and Lawrence were off for a rest, and the tight band around his head had already loosened. Cramped in his berth at night, he slept like a baby on the train. They stopped in Toronto to buy tackle and then started north, being dropped at their shack by the steamer. Chris stood on the bank and breathed deep of the crisp air.

"Ted," he said, "that's the first real lungful of air I've had in four years."

CHRIS AND TED were away when war broke out in Europe. Chris, rowing out to meet the weekly boat with their supplies, brought the news back, and Ted upset the potatoes he was peeling for dinner.

"How I'd like to go!"

Chris put down the paper and got ready to clean some fish. "I imagine it won't last long," he said. "Damn fish anyhow. I'm growing scales."

They dismissed it at that. They were camping alone in a wooden shack far from civilization. They lived mostly in bathing suits and in canoes, and both men were brown and strong. Chris's big muscles bulged from long portages, and his hands were steady again. At night they built a smudge by the river bank and sat there talking or silent.

That night when the war news came, Chris did not go to bed. He sat alone for a long time on the river bank while the fire burned low and then went out. The river in front and the pine woods behind seemed to cut him off from life.

Death. War meant death. He stirred uneasily seeing those men he had known and liked in Vienna now facing death; the bearded Hofrats, the eager young Docents, the sentry at the gate of the hospital, even the portier with his military mustache. All equal now in what they faced.

He was roused by the sound of a paddle, to see the leaden sheet of the river breaking into small waves at his feet. A canoe came out of the darkness, an Indian driving it rapidly and beaching it almost at his feet. He had brought a telegram, and Chris read it by the flare of a lighted match.

It said: "Father shot and in critical condition. Can you come?" and it was signed "Beverly."

He went out that night with the Indian guide, leaving Ted to break up the camp. Hour after hour he sat cramped in the canoe, watching the darker shadows of the woods as they moved past with horrible slowness. He offered to paddle, but the Indian gruffly refused, and at last he settled back thinking of that ironic twist by which he had hated and fought Staunton Lewis and now was hastening to try to save him.

It was daylight when they reached the settlement, and Chris sent off his wire to Beverly. He was weary and unshaven, but by taking a local at once he could catch the limited, and so he went as he stood. Already Canada was at war, the railroad bridges under guard, the faces of the people tense and brooding. But the train seemed to crawl. When it stopped he could hardly sit in his seat. He felt as if he must get out and push it, hurry it along; not because Staunton Lewis might be dying, but because Beverly had called him and he was on the way.

Two days later Chris operated. Grant was ill, and Beverly had insisted that they wait for Chris. Lewis had been shot in the abdomen and it was a case to try a man's very soul. The New York surgeon Jerry had sent for was opposed to an operation at all.

"What's the use? He won't stand up under it," he said.

Chris put the situation up to Beverly, white and quiet, with deep rings under her eyes. She seemed thinner than when he had known her, but her gaze was as direct as ever.

"You understand," he said. "He may come out. He may not. In any case——"

"It's his only chance, isn't it?"

"I think so. Yes."

"Then do it, Chris."

BUT LEWIS had more stamina than anyone had suspected. He had the will to live, too. For a week Chris hardly left him day or night. The fight raged. Sometimes the man in the bed had the advantage, and death seemed to retire into a dark corner to wait for the next round. Then it would come closer again, lean over the bed, seem to spread its black shadow over man and bed and room. Chris could almost see it there and he would try with all his will power to thrust it back.

Part of the time Lewis was conscious. Then Chris would occasionally find his eyes on him, ironic and slightly mocking, as if he said:

"Why do it? You don't like me and I don't like you. I'm not afraid to die."

Sometimes he would find Jerry Ames in the room; tall and smiling, and his father-in-law fixing on him a look of concentrated venom. Indeed, one of the first indications of recovery was when Lewis ordered Jerry out of the room. Not directly. He spoke to the nurse.

"Get my son-in-law out of the room and keep him out," he said distinctly. "And send in the orderly."

It was the first indication he had ever given of his dislike for Jerry and his distrust of him. He was smiling faintly when Jerry went out and still smiling when he turned his head and looked at Chris.

"Go on home, man," he said weakly. "Good lord, I haven't adopted you."

"I'm going when I'm good and ready," said Chris. "Do you think I'm going to throw away a week's work?"

"I suppose that's what I am—a good job, eh?"

"That's all. But a damned good job, if I do say it," said Chris, grinning.

They understood each other after that. It was talk Lewis could comprehend. Then one night, abruptly, he stared up at Chris with unwinking directness.

"What are you going to charge for all this?"

"All the tariff will stand! I need it," said Chris cheerfully.

On the first day Lewis was able to sit up in bed he wrote Chris a check for $10,000. Chris folded it up and put it in his pocket.

"Well?"

Chris grinned down at him. "If you think you're worth as much as that to the world, I'm not arguing. I'd figured on a thousand."

"You're an impudent young scamp," said Lewis, but later on the nurse, coming in, found him grinning to himself.

It was about that time that Chris had his first talk with Beverly since her marriage. She took him home from the hospital in the limousine. Both of them showed the wear and tear of the fight, and Chris leaned back in his corner and yawned.

"Sorry, I'm tired, Beverly."

"Of course you know how I feel, Chris. There aren't any words—"

"Don't thank me. I've done a job and been paid for it. That's my business."

She stirred. "Don't be hard, Chris. I can't seem to get near you. You shut me out when I try. Do you hate me so much, or is it just that I don't matter?"

"It's neither," he said stubbornly. "You chose your life, and I had to make one for myself. I don't want to be hurt again. That's all."

"And you're happy in this life of yours?"

"What is happiness, anyhow? I like my work. I'm ambitious. I suppose. I'm getting somewhere. It hasn't hurt me, you know, to sign daily bulletins as to your father's condition. Good publicity, my dear. Good ethical publicity!"

The car had stopped at the house, and the chauffeur was getting out to open the car door. She flushed and put a hand in his.

"You are lying, Chris," she said softly.

He went into his empty house, angry at himself and at her. Katie was away at the seashore with Harriet Lee, and he had the place to himself, but tired as he was he did not go to bed for some time.

KATIE was gone for several weeks, but Chris did not miss her. Work drifted in. He made his calls, went to the hospital, played some golf, came back to quiet summer nights and his pipe. The papers showed the war a bigger thing than any one had thought. It was going to last longer, too.

He never admitted to himself that Katie's absence was a relief. And Katie herself was supremely contented that summer; contented to waken late, to rock long hours on the hotel veranda, to walk the boardwalk with Harriet. Once every day she and Harriet would put on bathing suits, take a dip in the water, and then lie in the sand for an hour or two.

One day Barrett found them there. He was walking past, a youngish man in flannels, and his eyes traveled from Katie's hip to her face. Then he stopped.

"Well!" he said. "If it isn't a piece of luck. Here I am all alone, and I happen on beauty in repose."

He was the first man they had spoken to since their arrival, and in a moment he was sitting on the sand beside them. After that he met them there daily. It was all very proper, for there was Harriet, smiling and showing her big front teeth, and half burying herself in the sand to hide her thin body. They would go into the water, and now and then Barrett would catch Katie and push her under a wave. She was conscious of a queer excitement when he touched her, but she would come out again to be very prim and rather short with him.

Barrett was not fooled. She was ambitious; she wanted no trouble. Certainly she did not care for him. But she had a sensual appeal which kept his interest, and she was not afraid to exploit it. Pretty soon they were on first-name terms.

But beyond that he had made little or no progress when he had to leave her there and go home. He stood on the train platform and waved to her—and Harriet—when they saw him off.

"The little devil," he said to himself. "The smart little devil!" And went rather complacently back to his growing practice.

It was some time during that interval that Chris went to see Ursula's baby, passing David's and Letitia's house, now closed but still furnished.

"We took out a little. Not much," said Hiram. "Seemed a pity to tear it up, somehow."

"And the boy's success?"

"Say, listen——"

The boy was fine, a grave youngster who looked very much like Ursula but with Jerry's blond hair; and Amy looked younger and happier than Chris had ever seen her. They were adopting young Noel legally, and Chris left the next day, knowing that all was well with him. He carried with him a picture of the boy taken by the local photographer, and on it Amy had written, "Noel Martin Mortimer." When Chris got home, he put it carefully in the drawer of the desk, but first, out of sheer pity that Ursula should have no part in it, he wrote her name on the back and the date of the baby's birth.

Coordination Of State Relief Agencies Asked

C. of C. Unit Also Urges Finance Department Overhauling

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Dec. 29.—Establishment of an integrated State department of finance and coordination of welfare agencies under a central board were suggested today in the completed report of the committee on taxation and government of the State Chamber of Commerce.

The report will be studied by directors of the chamber at a meeting here next month.

The proposed department of finance would bring the present division of accounts and control, the treasury and the division of purchase and printing under one directing head to be known as the commissioner of finance, with the objective of establishing "sound fiscal management of every branch of the State government."

The committee expressed the belief that both the assessment and collection of public revenues should be handled by the State department of taxation, pointing out that the department now does not have the power to assess all State taxes and that there is a "scattering" of tax administration among several agencies.

The State comptroller's office, the committee said, should be relieved of tax collection, as well as other agencies such as the division of motor vehicles which collects 27 per cent of the State revenues. The fiscal functions of this division, under the committee's plan, would be transferred to the taxation department.

Other functions of the motor vehicle division would be absorbed by a new department of public safety in which ultimately all of the inspectional work requiring police powers would be coordinated.

Bat'a Threatens To Abandon Plans For Md. Factory

Archer said a modification of the order would be sought, and declared the company could not follow production plans with only ten skilled workmen.

Md. Sales Tax, Recurrent Ghost, Now Stalks Legislative Council

Often-Killed but Never-Dead Proposal Listed For Study at Jan. 10 Conference; Counties Bordering D. C. Fear Loss of Business

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 29.—That recurrent ghost of legislators, the proposal for a sales tax, is walking the legislative halls again.

The agenda for the January 10 meeting of the legislative council includes a proposal to study the State-wide sales tax as a possible revenue measure to be submitted to the 1941 Legislature.

The often-killed but never-dead sales tax bill was revived during the 1939 session, but went aground on committee shoals when the administration steam roller shoved its fiscal program through.

The sales tax measure was jointly introduced by a bloc of 25 legislators of both parties in the lower house. It proposed a 2 per cent levy on retail purchases, unprocessed farm produce excluded.

The 1939 measure was modeled on the Washington State law, which has produced such revenues that a constitutional limitation of 40 cents on $100 assessed valuation has been adopted in that State. The 40-cent limitation covers real property taxation for all purposes, State, county, school and municipal.

Opposition to the sales tax in Maryland came chiefly from the border counties and the districts surrounding Washington, where merchants claimed imposition of a sales tax would drive business into the adjoining tax-free area.

Proponents of the measure wrote to Washington State for border-county information and learned business had not suffered in the 300-mile strip of counties adjoining Oregon, which has no sales tax, but the bill was killed before the information was received.

It was estimated a 2 per cent tax would produce $10,000,000 annual revenue to relieve real property taxpayers.

The committee on arrangements said the list of speakers at the two-day institute would include John Hanna, reporter on security for the American Law Institute, and professor of law at Columbia University; Garrard Glenn, adviser on security for the American Law Institute and professor of law at the University of Virginia, and James A. McLaughlin, another institute adviser on security and professor of law at Harvard.
